IN THE MATTER OF

VIVIANO MACARONI COMPANY

ORDER, OPINION, ETC., IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 2(a), 2(d) AND 2(e) OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket 8666. Complaint, Sept. 21, 1965—Decision, Feb. 19, 1968

Order requiring a Carnegie, Pa., manufacturer of macaroni and other food products to cease discriminating in prices, promotional allowances and services in sales to competing retailers who resell its products.

COMPLAINT*

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the party respondent named in the caption hereof, and hereinafter more particularly designated and described, has violated, and is now violating the provisions of subsections (a), (d) and (e) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended (U.S.C., Title 15, Sec. 13), hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges with respect thereto as follows:

COUNT I

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Viviano Macaroni Company is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with its office and principal place of business located on Noblestown Road, Collier Township, Pennsylvania. Mail addressed to respondent is directed

*Reported as amended by Hearing Examiner's order of Dec. 21, 1965, by changing the name of respondent from Vimco Macaroni Products Company to Viviano Macaroni Company.

Complaint

through Post Office Box 546, United States Post Office, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

PAR. 2. Respondent has been, and is now, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of macaroni, macaroni products, egg noodles, prepared foods, and sauces. Respondent sells its said products to a large number of customers, located principally in the State of Ohio and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, who purchase such products for use, consumption, or resale. Respondent's customers are, primarily, wholesale grocers and retail chain stores, but also include manufacturers, independent retail stores, restaurants, and institutions. Respondent's sales of its products are substantial, exceeding $4,000,000 in the year 1962.

PAR. 3. Respondent sells and causes its products to be transported from its manufacturing plant and principal place of business in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to purchasers located in other States of the United States. There has been at all times mentioned herein a continuous course of trade in said products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business in commerce, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of macaroni, macaroni products, egg noodles, prepared foods, and sauces.

Many of the purchasers of respondent's products of like grade and quality, and customers of some of said purchasers, are in substantial competition with each other in the resale and distribution of such products within the trading areas where said purchasers are located.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business in commerce, and particularly during and since 1963, respondent has been, and is now discriminating in price between different purchasers of its products by selling said products to some purchasers at higher and less favorable prices than those prices charged competing purchasers for products of like grade and quality.

For example, most of respondent's major customers are located within a trade area composed of eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania. Respondent's largest customer, located within the above described market area, is the Youngstown-Pittsburgh Division of National Tea Company, a corporation of the State of Illinois, with its Youngstown-Pittsburgh Division offices located at 650 Meridian Road, Youngstown, Ohio. This division of National Tea Company is comprised of 114 individual retail food stores, doing business as Loblaw, Inc., and/or Loblaw Markets. During the year 1963, respondent granted this division of National Tea Company freight allowances which were 45.5%, or approximately $9,000, in excess of the actual cost of freight transportation. As an introductory offer, respondent also gave this division of National Tea Company more than 6,600 cases of respondent's products, free of any cost, with an approximate value of $25,000. The aforesaid inflated freight allowance was also allowed on this free merchandise, creating a total introductory allowance having an approximate value of $26,800.

The excessive freight allowances and the free merchandise referred to above resulted, directly or indirectly, in a substantial discount from the prices at which respondent sold goods of like grade and quality to other purchasers competing in the resale and distribution of respondent's products with National Tea Company.

As a further example, in the trade area composed of eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania, respondent sells its products to a majority of its retail and wholesale customers, including, e.g., The Kroger Company, Giant Eagle Super Markets, Thorofare Markets, and Golden Dawn Foods, Inc., at prices corresponding to those prices published in respondent's price lists. Said prices were not offered or granted by respondent to other purchasers, who purchased respondent's products on a cash basis at prices averaging 2.5 percent to 13 percent above respondent's highest prevailing published list prices, and who compete with the said favored purchasers in the sale and distribution of respondent's products of like grade and quality.

PAR. 6. The effect of the discriminations in price made by respondent in the sale of its products, as hereinbefore set forth, has been or may be substantially to lessen competition in the line of commerce in which respondent is engaged, and in which said favored purchasers are engaged, or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with said respondent, or its purchasers who receive the benefits of such discriminations.

PAR. 7. The discriminations in price made by respondent in the sale of its products, as hereinbefore alleged, are in violation of subsection (a) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

COUNT II

PAR. 8. Paragraphs One through Four of Count I hereof are hereby incorporated by reference, and made a part of this Count, as fully, and with the same effect, as if quoted herein verbatim.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of its business in commerce, and particularly during and since 1962, respondent has paid or contracted for the payment of something of value to or for the benefit of some of its customers as compensation or in consideration for services or facilities furnished by or through such customers in connection with their offering for sale, or sale of products sold to them by respondent, and such payments have not been made available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the sale and distribution of respondent's products.

For example, respondent has offered and paid various payments and allowances to certain of its customers, which payments and allowances have not been offered, or paid, or otherwise made available to all of respondent's customers competing with the said favored customers. These payments or allowances included, but were not limited to: (1) free merchandise for store openings, anniversary sales, and other promotional purposes; (2) payments and allowances under "Cooperative Merchandising Agreements" for printed handbill, radio, television, or newspaper advertising of respondent's products; (3) payments or allowances for various periodic promotions of respondent's products; and (4) payments or allowances for radio or television advertising in excess of any payments or allowances which the customer might be entitled to under the aforesaid "Cooperative Merchandising Agreements."

PAR. 10. The acts and practices of respondent, as alleged herein, are in violation of subsection (d) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

COUNT III

PAR. 11. Paragraphs One through Four of Count I hereof are hereby incorporated by reference, and made a part of this Count, as fully, and with the same effect, as if quoted herein verbatim.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of its business in commerce, and particularly during and since 1962, respondent has discriminated in favor of certain purchasers of its products, purchased for resale, by contracting to furnish, contributing to the furnishing of, or furnishing, to such favored purchasers, services or facilities connected with the handling, sale, or offering for sale of such products so purchased, while not according such services or facilities to all competing purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

For example, respondent has, directly or indirectly, through Merchant's Broadcasting System, a corporation located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, furnished, or contributed to the furnishing of, broadcasting equipment, and taped background music and commercial announcements to certain retail grocery stores in the Greater Pittsburgh.

Pennsylvania, area. During the period November 5, 1962, to October 23, 1963, respondent paid a total of $18,540.91 for the Merchant's Broadcasting System service, approximately 95.5 percent of which expenditure was paid for the furnishing of the above detailed services to the individual grocery markets of four large chain grocery stores who are engaged in interstate commerce. Such services or facilities were not accorded to all competing purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

As a further example, respondent has, directly or indirectly, through Super Market Broadcasting Systems, Inc., a corporation located in Chicago, Illinois, furnished, or contributed to the furnishing of, broadcasting equipment, and taped background music and commercial announcements to the retail grocery customers of two of respondent's wholesale grocer customers, who transact business in both the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and the State of Ohio. In the years 1962 and 1963 respondent paid $3,056 and $3,309, respectively, for the above described service. Such services or facilities were not accorded to all competing purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

PAR. 13. The acts and practices of respondent, as alleged herein, are in violation of subsection (e) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

Mr. Ernest G. Barnes, Mr. Thomas P. Athridge, Jr., Mr. Charles A. Price and Mr. Hans C. Nolde supporting the complaint.

Whitlock, Markey and Tait, Washington, D.C., by Mr. Edward T. Tait and Mr. William D. Matthews for respondent.

INITIAL DECISION BY ANDREW C. GOODHOPE, HEARING EXAMINER

AUGUST 31, 1966

The Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint against respondent on September 21, 1965, charging it with violations of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The charges were that respondent had violated subsections 2(a), 2(d) and 2(e) of the Clayton Act as amended in selling its products to certain of its customers. The respondent filed an answer in which it admitted certain allegations of the complaint and denied that it had violated any of the subsections of the Clayton Act as amended and alleged certain defenses discussed hereafter.

This matter is before the hearing examiner for final consideration on the complaint, answer, evidence and the proposed findings of fact and conclusions and memoranda and briefs filed by counsel for respondent and counsel supporting the complaint. Consideration has been given to the proposed findings of fact and conclusions submitted by both parties, and all proposed findings of fact and conclusions not hereinafter specifically found or concluded are rejected, and the hearing examiner, having considered the entire record herein, makes the following findings of fact, conclusions drawn therefrom and issues the following order:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. The respondent, Viviano Macaroni Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania with its office and principal place of business located on Noblestown Road, Collier Township, Pennsylvania. Mail address of respondent is Post Office Box 546, United States Post Office, Carnegie, Pennsylvania. (Comp. and Ans. Pars. One.)¹

2. Respondent has been, and is now, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of macaroni products, including spaghetti of various thicknesses and cuts, egg noodles, prepared foods, and sauces. Respondent sells its said products to a large number of customers, located principally in the State of Ohio and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, who purchase such products for use, consumption, or resale. Respondent's customers are, primarily, wholesale grocers and retail chain stores, but also include manufacturers, independent retail stores, restaurants, and institutions. Respondent's sales of its products are substantial, exceeding 4 million in the years 1962 and 1965, and exceeding 3 million in 1963 and 1964. (Comp. and Ans. Pars. Two—Tr. 85.) Approximately 70 percent of respondent's total sales are of three macaroni products—elbow macaroni, regular spaghetti, and thin spaghetti. (Tr. 85.) Macaroni products are semiperishable in nature and are an important and staple product in the grocery industry. Stocks of these products, because of their nature, are constantly required in retail grocery stores and because of their semiperishable nature comparatively small inventories are kept on hand, necessitating frequent orders. (Tr. 347-348, 1521, 1538.)

3. Respondent sells and causes its products to be transported from its manufacturing plant and principal place of business in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to purchasers located in other States of the United States.

There has been, at all times mentioned herein, a continuous course of trade in said products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended. In its answer, respondent admitted that it was engaged in interstate commerce, but denied that any of the transactions alleged to be discriminatory in the complaint occurred in commerce or in the course of commerce. (Ans. Par. Three.) The question of commerce will be considered separately hereafter in connection with each of the three violations charged.

4. In the course and conduct of its business in commerce, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of macaroni, macaroni products, egg noodles, prepared foods, and sauces.

Many of the purchasers of respondent's products of like grade and quality, and customers of some of said purchasers, are in substantial competition with each other in the resale and distribution of such products within the trading areas where said purchasers are located. (See Resp. Prop. Findings pp. 1-8.)

Respondent sells and distributes its products to a large number of customers located primarily throughout that area within a 150 mile radius surrounding respondent's manufacturing facilities located near Carnegie, Pennsylvania. In addition to western Pennsylvania, this trading area also includes eastern Ohio, northern West Virginia, and northwestern Maryland. (Tr. 86.) Respondent's customers involved in this proceeding consist primarily of wholesale food distributors, chain and independent retail grocers. (Tr. 86-88, Comp. and Ans. Par. Two.)

5. Since the year 1963, respondent has employed approximately fifteen salesmen who represent respondent by calling upon all wholesale food distributors, independent retail grocers, and the headquarters and individual stores of chain retail grocers located within each salesman's respective sales territory. This sales force constitutes respondent's primary means of distributing and selling its products, the individual salesmen being responsible for transacting sales, introducing new items, taking care of complaints and spoilage, and " * * * doing anything in their power to promote the sale of Vimco products. * * *" (Tr. 86-87.)

6. Respondent sells and delivers its products directly to wholesale food distributors, chain retail grocers, and certain independent retail grocers in minimum individual order quantities of twenty-five cases. (CX 2-3, 7-8.) Respondent also sells its products, usually in minimum individual order quantities of twenty-five cases, to wholesale food distributors, drop-shipping the products to the wholesaler's retailer customer. (Tr. 90.) Finally, respondent sells its products, in small quantities, directly to retail grocers, primarily independent retail grocers, who normally buy from a wholesaler on a cash basis through "off-the-car sales" by its salesmen. (Tr. 98-101.)

Respondent's Regular Prices

7. Respondent publishes and distributes price lists for its various products which lists give three different price brackets based upon different case volume purchase quantities. These three price brackets are calculated to pass on freight savings for larger purchases. (CX 1-3, 7-8, Tr. 94-96.) Respondent's normal credit terms are 2%, 10 days, net 30 days. Respondent also provides floor stock protection against the price declines for any stock in a warehouse at the time of the price reduction. Respondent also has regular cooperation advertising agreements, which it offers to all of the purchasers of its products that it considers to be its direct customers. In addition, respondent has periodic merchandising and promotion allowances, which are extended to all of its customers. (Tr. 103-105.) No charges of discriminatory practices are based upon the above described selling methods. The charges in the complaint are all based upon deviations from respondent's regular merchandising program.

Charges of Price Discrimination in Violation of Section 2(a)

8. During the year 1963, the National Tea Company owned and operated a chain of approximately 110 retail stores from a division headquarters located in Youngstown, Ohio. This group was operated as the Youngstown-Pittsburgh Division of National Tea by the All-American Stamp and Premium Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of National Tea. (Tr. 301-302.) The stores comprising this division were located in eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania and operated under various trade names including "Loblaw, Big D markets and Loblaw Big D food markets." (CX 1349a-b.) Hereafter, in this decision this division of National Tea and its stores will all be collectively referred to as "Loblaw," since this was the trade name under which most of these stores operated in 1963. (CX 1349a-b.) Loblaw stores, pertinent to this decision, were located in: Akron, Ohio, 11 stores; Canton, Ohio, 5 stores; Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, 5 stores; Youngstown, Ohio, 11 stores; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 18 stores; Sharon, Pennsylvania, 2 stores. (CX 1349a-b.)

9. Prior to January 1963 respondent had been selling its products to individual Loblaw stores from its regular price list by making delivery directly to each Loblaw store which desired to purchase its products on a drop-shipment basis, with billing being made directly to the Youngstown Loblaw office and payment coming from this office. Respondent's products were not stocked in nor delivered from any Loblaw warehouse. (Tr. 124-128, CX 25-38.) In the late winter of 1962, subsequent to a reorganization and change in management in the Youngstown division of National Tea (Loblaw), respondent, by its principal officer, Mr. Samuel Viviano, entered negotiations directly with the new Loblaw management in an attempt to place its entire line in the Loblaw Youngstown warehouse for delivery by Loblaw to all Loblaw stores. (Tr. 128-129.) In January of 1963, these negotiations resulted in the following arrangement:

A. Respondent agreed to give Loblaw free goods in the amount equal to the first two orders placed by Loblaw for twenty-nine of the respondent's macaroni products. The result of this being that there could be a number of orders and invoices for various products but only the first two covering a particular product of respondent's would be credited with free goods. There was no limit placed upon either the size of the orders or the amount of free goods delivered, only that they should be equal. (Tr. 131-133, 1512, 1584-1585.) The record does not contain complete information as to the amount of free goods delivered, but during the three-month period beginning May 1963, when the free goods shipments began, Loblaw received, free, at least 6,600 free cases of respondent's products for a total dollar purchase value of $25,000. (CX 75-110.)

B. Respondent agreed to sell its products to Loblaw at its published 350-case price. (Tr. 129-130, 1587.)

C. Respondent agreed to permit Loblaw to pick up respondent's products at its manufacturing plant in Carnegie, Pennsylvania, in Loblaw trucks, and to give Loblaw a "pick-up" freight allowance of $1.69 per hundredweight applicable to all of respondent's goods invoiced to Loblaw. The $1.69 freight allowance was thereafter granted to Loblaw, not only on the products for which it paid but also on the free goods which Loblaw picked up in its own trucks. Respondent granted this freight allowance and Loblaw picked up respondent's products continuously from January to December, 1963. (Tr. 129-130, 135; CXs 40, 48, 50, 51, 61, 65, 67, 69, 71, 72, 74-102, 104-114, 117, 118, 1508-1530.)

Initial Decision

73 F.T.C.

D. Respondent agreed to extend its normal credit terms of 2%—10 days, to 2%—20 days, on all purchases by Loblaw. These terms were in effect from January to December 1963. (Tr. 129-131; CX 39.)

E. Respondent agreed to pay Loblaw all allowances which would be due under respondent's periodic merchandising offers by the issuance of a credit memorandum to Loblaw covering goods under one of respondent's merchandising offers. (Tr. 110, 1585-1587.) This resulted in Loblaw obtaining this money immediately without the necessity of submitting proof of performance of the required sales promotion or advertising services. Thus, Loblaw received this money without the usual delay between delivery of the products and the submission of proof of performance and payment of the promotional allowance. Loblaw received prepayments of this type amounting to $10,000 during the first seven months of 1963. (CXs 41, 49, 52, 54, 56, 58, 60, 62, 64, 66, 68, 70, 73, 103, 115, 119.)

Counsel in support of the complaint contend that parts A, C and D of this arrangement violated Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended.² (See counsel in support of the complaint, Prop. Findings, p. 157.)

Interstate Commerce

10. Respondent urges that neither the agreement described above nor any of the products covered by the agreement can be considered to have been made or shipped in the course of interstate commerce. (Resp. Prop. Findings, p. 18.) This contention by respondent must be rejected. The whole sense of the agreement was that respondent's products were to be sold to Loblaw, which had its headquarters in Youngstown, Ohio, and delivered by Loblaw, by whatever means it chose, to its stores located both in Pennsylvania and Ohio. While some of the products covered by the agreement may never have left the state of Pennsylvania, a substantial portion of them did. Certainly those that were carried by Loblaw back to the Youngstown, Ohio, warehouse and delivered to stores in Ohio and Pennsylvania from this point must be considered to have been in commerce.

² Section 2(a) in pertinent part provides:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce * * * and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition * * * in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." (49 Stat. 1526; 15 U.S.C.A. Sec. 13.)

11. The record is replete with evidence that there were a substantial number of competitors of Loblaw purchasing respondent's products of like grade and quality, located both in the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio, who were in direct competition with Loblaw in the resale of respondent's products. Included among these customers who appeared and testified were independent retailers—Lazar Supermarkets of Youngstown, Ohio, (Tr. 689-691, 694, 706-707) and Fisher Foods of Canton, Ohio, Inc. (Tr. 1243-1250.) Neither of these customers were extended the same type of price concessions during 1963 as were extended to Loblaw, and both were in competition with Loblaw stores in Youngstown and Canton, Ohio. Chain store customers of respondent in competition with Loblaw appeared and testified. The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, Inc., purchased over $40,000 worth of respondent's products during 1963 at respondent's regular prices, and resold them in competition with Loblaw through 59 stores located in eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania. (Tr. 310-315, CX 872b, 1103-1129; compare A & P's store list CX 1103 for Youngstown, Ohio, with Loblaw's store list 1349a-b for Youngstown, Ohio.) The Fred W. Albrecht Grocery Company, with 25 stores located in Akron and Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, purchased respondent's products at respondent's regular prices during 1963 and competed with a number of Loblaw stores. (Tr. 1111-1112, compare CX 1620 and 1349a.) The Kroger Company, Inc., in 1963 purchased respondent's products at regular list prices and sold these products through supermarkets located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Youngstown, Ohio. (Tr. 166-168, CX 1354-1384, 544, 872b.) A number of these Kroger stores competed directly with Loblaw stores in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Youngstown, Ohio. (Compare CX 1354 with 1349a.) Representatives of five wholesale food distributors appeared and testified. All of these wholesalers purchased respondent's products and sold them to independent retailers, including voluntary chain stores who were in competition with Loblaw retail stores in both Pennsylvania and Ohio. They all purchased at respondent's regular published prices. (Tr. 1078-1079, 1082-1083, CX 221-281, 872a-b; Tr. 336-345, CX 1141, 1169, 1174-1188; Tr. 1198-1213, CX 1624a-f, 408a-475, 872a; Tr. 384-401, CX 127-133, 138-155, 1349a-b, 645f-h.) Eleven independent retail grocers who purchase respondent's macaroni products from wholesalers of such products appeared and testified. These retailers were all located in Ohio, and testified that they competed with Loblaw stores. Each bought respondent's products at their regular wholesaler's prices. (Tr. 607-615, CX 806-844; Tr. 623-631, CX 286, 315, 343, 845a-856b;

Initial Decision

Tr. 639-643, 658-660; CX 1349a; Tr. 673-680, CX 287; Tr. 710-717, CX 1292-1315; Tr. 721-731, CX 1189-1244; Tr. 1099-1102, CX 476-478; Tr. 1151-1158, CX 417-426; Tr. 1182-1191; Tr. 1230-1233, CX 410-416; Tr. 1274-1282, CX 427-475.)

12. With this wealth of evidence of interstate sales by respondent both to Loblaw and to competitors of Loblaw, it can only be held that the transactions charged to be discriminatory occurred in commerce, Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co., 348 U.S. 115 (1954); Sun Cosmetic Shoppe v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp., 178 F. 2d 150 (C.A. 2 1949).

13. This evidence likewise forces the conclusion that respondent was selling products of like grade and quality to Loblaw and Loblaw's competitors continuously throughout the year 1963. While it's true that the record does not contain substantial evidence that competitors of Loblaw were handling the same identical products as were handled by a specific Loblaw store on a specific day, the record leaves no doubt that this was the case. It would be a practical impossibility at this date in 1966 to go back to records of either respondent in 1963 or customers of respondent who competed with Loblaw in 1963 to establish this point. As pointed out above respondent's largest selling products, which consisted of approximately 70% of respondent's total sales, elbow macaroni, regular spaghetti and thin spaghetti were regularly carried by all of the retail stores handling respondent's products. The testimony by respondent's official and an examination of the invoices of respondent to Loblaw in conjunction with the testimony and invoices in the record of shipments to Loblaw competitors leave no doubt that these best selling items were regularly handled at all times by all such customers.

Effect on Competition

14. The record in this matter establishes clearly that there is severe competition at all levels in the food industry and particularly in the macaroni industry (see for example respondent's proposed findings pages 3-8). This competition is particularly acute at the wholesale and retail levels. The record establishes that grocery products including macaroni are highly advertised at very competitive prices. The record establishes that the average net profit on sales of grocery items by retailers is approximately 2% of the total volume, and these figures are also true of the net profit on macaroni items. Furthermore, the testimony in the record makes it plain that cost of goods and competitive retail prices are the most important elements of competition at the retail level. (Tr. 277, 282-284, 348, 1084, 1187, 1233, 1246; CX 874-881, 1585-1587, 1621-1629.)

15. The discriminations which the respondent granted Loblaw during the year 1963 are substantial. While the record does not permit exact figures, Loblaw received somewhere between 10% and 12% discount on its 1963 purchases as a result of receiving respondent's free goods and freight allowances.³ It is apparent that in an industry marked by such severe competition as exists in the macaroni industry a reduction in price such as given to Loblaw of necessity must be found to be injurious to competition. Both prior Commission and court proceedings require that under the circumstances of this matter it be found that respondent's price discriminations in favor of Loblaw had the effect on competition proscribed by the Clayton Act. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37 (1948); In the Matter of Foremost Daries, Inc., F.T.C. Docket No. 7475 (decided May 23, 1963) [62 F.T.C. 1344], aff'd 348 F. 2d 674 (C.A. 5 1965); In the Matter of William H. Rover, Inc., F.T.C. Docket No. 8599 (decided May 9, 1966) [69 F.T.C. 667].

Respondent's Meeting Competition Defense

16. Respondent asserts that it granted the free goods, freight allowance and extended credit terms to Loblaw to meet competitive offers by four of its competitors, Gioia Macaroni Company, La Rosa and Sons, San Giorgio Macaroni Company and the Ideal Macaroni Company. Respondent argues that there was a great amount of wheeling and dealing on macaroni during the year 1962, and that respondent was forced into a position of meeting this severe competition or suffer the loss of a substantial amount of its business. At the last meeting with Mr. Dickson of Loblaw, Mr. Viviano was advised that other companies were bidding for Loblaw macaroni business, and after the deal was made Mr. Dickson advised that all the offers were close and that he could have done better with another company. (Tr. 1467, 1494, 1514-1515, 1588-1590.)

The record makes it apparent that Mr. Viviano was not aware of what any of the offers of his competitors were, only that he believed they were making Loblaw excellent offers of somewhat the same amount as his offer. Representatives of three of the competitors who did make Loblaw offers appeared and testified. These were representatives of Gioia, La Rosa, and San Giorgio. (Tr. 1633, 1651, 1668.) Ideal, apparently, never made an offer. The testimony of these witnesses and the written offers which they made show that there was no close similarity in the offers of any of these competitors to the deal that Viviano finally granted Loblaw. (CX 1713-1719.)

17. Prior cases in which meeting competition defense have been treated make it apparent that the respondent has failed in establishing that its deal with Loblaw was made to meet the equally low price of a competitor. Respondent was merely reacting to a general competitive situation and not to any specific offer of a lower price or better terms of any specific competitor. In addition, respondent has failed to demonstrate that the offers which competitors did make were lawful offers. In the Matter of National Dairy Products Corporation, F.T.C. Docket No. 7018 (decided July 28, 1966) [70 F.T.C. 79]; In the Matter of Tri-Valley Packing Association, F.T.C. Docket No. 7225 and 7496 (decided July 28, 1966) [70 F.T.C. 223]; In the Matter of Knoll Associates, Inc., F.T.C. Docket No. 8549 (decided August 2, 1966) [70 F.T.C. 311].

Respondent's "Off-the-Car" Sales

18. Respondent's salesmen, as part of their normal day to day activity, call upon retailers who are customers of wholesaler customers of respondent; the purpose of these calls are to assist the retailer sell merchandise and attempt to keep respondent's products on the retailers' shelves. Respondent does not consider these retailers to be its customers, but rather customers of the wholesaler. (Tr. 98, 173, 564-566, 569.) As a part of this effort, respondent's salesmen from time to time will carry a small supply of respondent's products in the back of their cars. If a retailer who is a customer of a wholesaler is out of stock of an item and desires to purchase from respondent's salesman, the salesman will sell to the retailer from stock which he is carrying. In making out the invoice, the salesman sends one copy of the invoice to the respondent and another to the wholesaler from whom the retailer normally purchases his supplies of respondent's products. (Tr. 99-100, CX 1338a-1343d.) Under respondent's policy, these sales are to be made at the same price at which the wholesaler would sell such products to the retailer. These sales are a very small part of respondent's business and are made only to fill in a retailer's stocks. No attempt is made by the respondent's salesmen to compete with their wholesaler in the particular area for such sales. These sales constitute an inconsequential portion of respondent's total business. (Tr. 596-597.)

The record does contain evidence that one of respondent's salesmen sold these products to various retail stores at varying prices. (CX 1340a-1343d.) However, these sales are of such a de minimis nature that no finding of substantial price discrimination or any meaningful effect upon competition can be based thereon. Consequently, the contention of counsel supporting the complaint that these sales by this one salesman of respondent violated § 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended, is rejected.

Charges of Violation of Section 2(d)

19. In their proposed findings counsel in support of the complaint urges that the respondent has violated Section 2(d) in five different ways: (a) by its payments to State Food Stores, Moundsville, West Virginia, for participation in a radio program; (b) by its payments to the Fox Grocery Company, Belle Vernon, Pennsylvania, for participation in radio and television programs; (c) by its payments to By-Rite Markets, Inc., Wheeling, West Virginia, for participation in a radio program; (d) by prepaying all amounts of advertising allowances due under its regularly cooperative advertising agreements at the time of invoicing such products, rather than later after the submission of proof of performance, to six customers, including the prepayments to Loblaw discussed above; (e) by failing to give "off-the-car" customers respondent's regularly offered advertising allowance.

20. During the year 1963, respondent made payments to the State Food Stores in the amount of $10 per week for participation in a radio program sponsored by that retail chain. (Tr. 188-189, 1417, CX 495a.) State Food Stores were supplied by a wholesaler of respondent who had no part in the arrangement between respondent and State Food Stores. State Food Stores had a number of competitors at the retail level to whom no similar advertising payment or allowance was offered on any basis. (Tr. 188-189.) The competing stores were supplied respondent's macaroni products through two wholesalers, the Wheeling Wholesale Grocery Company, who supplied State Food Stores and Zarnits Grocery Company. Both of these wholesalers sold to retailers in competition with State Food Stores. (Tr. 828-831, 838, CX 1396b-j, Tr. 790-795, 819.)

Respondent contends that its payments to State Food Stores were made in good faith to meet the competition of the San Giorgio Macaroni Company. Respondent contends that during 1962, the State Food Stores began a radio program in Moundsville and were later advised by an official of the State Food Stores that San Giorgio was offering a lot of free goods and advertising money to State Food Stores if it would take on San Giorgio. (Tr. 1419.) Later, respondent's salesman was approached by an official of State Food Stores and advised that San Giorgio was willing to participate in the radio program if the respondent did not. (Tr. 191-192, 1419-1421.) When advised of this, respondent's principal official, Mr. Samuel Viviano agreed to this program and participated for a period of about a year at $10 per week. (Tr. 190.) An official of the San Giorgio Company testified in rebuttal in this matter, but no questions were asked regarding San Giorgio's offer of payments to State Food Stores. Under the circumstances, the hearing examiner must conclude that San Giorgio had made a bona fide offer to participate in the radio program with State Food Stores and that the respondent in good faith made this offer and subsequent payments in order to maintain its position in the State Food Stores, meeting the competition of San Giorgio. The size of the payments were only $10 per week, which could reasonably lead respondent to believe that San Giorgio's offer to participate was an entirely lawful and proper offer.

21. The Fox Grocery Company is a wholesale grocer operating from 70 to 75 miles from Belle Vernon, Pennsylvania. Respondent has supplied Fox with a complete line of macaroni products for many years. During the relevant period 1963, Fox was carrying a competitive line of macaroni products, Procino & Rossi macaroni, and a small amount of Muellers macaroni. (Tr. 754-759.) During the period 1963 to 1965, respondent had made payments to the Fox Grocery Company for participation in television shows and radio programs, which feature products sold by the Foodland Stores. (Tr. 763-764.) Foodland Stores were a voluntary chain of independent supermarkets which were supplied their grocery products by Fox. (Tr. 760-761.) The arrangement between respondent and Fox and Fox's advertising agency was essentially for television advertising with the respondent paying $350 for each television spot during the year 1963, $250 in 1964 and $300 in 1965. During the three years respondent paid Fox in excess of $20,000 for participation in these television and radio programs. The television program consisted of a movie with opening and closing billboards and spot advertising interspersed during the course of the movie. Only one macaroni product could properly be advertised during the course of the program. Mr. Viviano candidly conceded that he did not make similar payments or offers to any of Fox's competitors. (Tr. 204.) Fox had competitors who were handling respondent's products of like grade and quality and who operated in the same areas as Fox, both in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Wheeling Wholesale Grocery purchased a complete line of respondent's products from 1962 to 1965. (Tr. 759, 844.) Wheeling Wholesale had a number of independent grocery retail customers in Wheeling, West Virginia who were in competition with Foodland Stores when reselling respondent's products. (Tr. 755, 758, 832; CX 1396-1397, 1534.) Zarnits Brothers Grocery Company also a wholesale grocer had customers in Wheeling, West Virginia who competed with Foodland Stores. (Tr. 820-827; CX 1395.) Potter-McCune and Associated Grocers, both of whom are wholesale grocers in competition with Fox and with customers located in the same areas as Foodland Stores in selling respondent's products. None of these wholesalers were offered any type of like or similar advertising payments to those granted to Fox.

22. Respondent contends that the payments made to Fox Grocery Company were made to meet the competition of two competitors, La Primiatta Macaroni Company, and the Procino & Rossi Macaroni Company. Respondent was advised by an official of the Fox Grocery Company that both of these competitors of respondent had offered to participate in Fox's television and radio programs, (Tr. 759, 766 et seq.) and promptly thereafter respondent agreed to make the payments to Fox. Respondent's contention that these payments were made in good faith to meet like or similar payments of a competitor or competitors must be rejected. Fox had been a customer of respondent for many years, (CX 876) and at the time respondent's products were Fox's largest selling macaroni product by "5 to 1 over anything else." (Tr. 759-760.) It is clear to the examiner that the respondent knew or should have known that these payments of a substantial character over and above respondent's regular cooperative advertising payments were discriminatory. It should have been equally clear that for either of its competitors to make like or similar payments, in view of their weak position with Fox, would have been clearly unlawful. Consequently, the examiner finds that the respondent could not have made these payments in good faith to meet like or similar payments of these two competitors.

23. There can be no question but that both the sales and payments to the Fox Grocery Company were made in the course of commerce. While Fox's headquarters is located in Belle Vernon, Pennsylvania, the Foodland Stores are located in Wheeling, West Virginia, and the payments which respondent made to Fox were to benefit all such stores. Consequently, both the payments to Fox and sales to Fox for resale to Foodland must be considered to have been in commerce.

24. Commencing on April 1, 1963, and ending June 30, 1963, respondent paid By-Rite Markets, Inc., of Wheeling, West Virginia, $15 a week for radio advertising. The record shows that the total payments made to By-Rite were $195 (CX 500). At the time, By-Rite was owned by the Fox Grocery Company which acquired these seven By-Rite stores on May 3, 1962. The record, with regard to the relationship between By-Rite and Fox, is quite vague but apparently it was operating somewhat autonomously of Fox, although it did acquire all of its grocery products from Fox. Respondent contends that counsel in support of the complaint has failed to show that these payments were not or could not be considered to be a part of respondent's regular promotional advertising agreements which provided for radio advertising. The testimony of the witness, Kemper of Fox is, at best, vague (Tr. 762-764). The testimony of Mr. Viviano is contradictory (Tr. 196-197, 211, 1596-1598). The exhibit upon which counsel in support of the complaint rely, Comm. Exh. 500, is not conclusive. Consequently, the examiner finds that counsel in support of the complaint have failed to carry their burden of demonstrating that these payments by By-Rite violated Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

25. Counsel in support of the complaint contend that the prepayment by respondent of periodic merchandising payments to Loblaw and to five other of its customers, Charley Brothers, F. W. Albrecht Grocery Company, Betsy Ross Foods, Thorofare Markets and Reeves Parvin violated Section 2(d). (Tr. 110, 134, 1585-1587; CX 9, 13, 14, 16, 41, 49, 52, 54, 56, 58, 60, 62, 64, 66, 68, 70, 73, 103, 115, 119, 215, 216, 256, 265, 373-378, 381-389, 630, 642, 800-805.) The record demonstrates that these customers were required to submit proof of performance of the advertising or promotional activities but this was not required before payment was received. The allowances were given to these customers immediately by the issuance of a credit memorandum at the time the merchandise was invoiced and shipped. Other customers of respondent who competed in reselling similar products did not receive their payments until after they had supplied respondent with proof of performance of the advertising or promotional services. Respondent was apparently willing to extend this prepayment to any customer who desired the prepayment, particularly if the customer claimed that it was a hardship not to obtain the money immediately (Tr. 110).

In the examiner's opinion, these prepayments to these few customers were not discriminations of a sufficiently important nature to bottom a finding of violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act. All that the record shows is that the respondent made these prepayments in six instances but had advised its sales force that such prepayments would be made to any customer who requested them. Any advantage which these customers might have enjoyed over their competitors as a result of these prepayments are, in the examiner's opinion, of such insignificant value as not to warrant a finding of violation.

26. Counsel in support of the complaint contend that respondent failed to offer customers to whom it made "off-the-car" sales, respondent's regular cooperative advertising arrangement and thereby violated Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended. As pointed out above, these sales were so small as to be de minimis and the small amounts of any advertising allowances based on these minute sales would be inconsequential. In addition, respondent, as pointed out above, did not consider the retailers to whom these sales were made as its own customers, but customers of the wholesale grocer who had normally supplied their needs for respondent's products. In addition, the record is not clear as to whether the normal wholesale supplier would receive credit for these sales for advertising allowance purposes, but presumably he would have since he received a copy of the invoice. The contention of counsel in support of the complaint that respondent violated Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended, by failing to offer respondent's "off-the-car" customers its regular advertising allowance is rejected.

Charges of Violation of Section 2(e)

27. Counsel in support of the complaint contend that respondent has violated Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, as amended, as a result of its arrangements providing instore background music to 12 of its customers. This background music included verbal advertisements of a number of each of these customers' suppliers products including those of the respondent. Other in-store promotional services were also to be furnished by the retailer. The respondent made payments to the broadcasting companies for supplying this music to the retail outlets and these payments are the basis for the charge of violation of Section 2(e).

28. Commencing in September 1962 and continuing through September 1963, the respondent paid the Merchants Broadcasting System (MBS) for transmitting a music program into approximately 200 retail stores of four supermarket chains: Loblaw, Kroger, Thorofare, Giant Eagle, and nine independent retail grocers located in the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, area (Tr. 929-930). The contract between respondent and MBS provided for a monthly rebate of 20% of all revenues paid by suppliers to go to the four chains (Tr. 928, et seq.; CX 1577 A-C, 1564 A-B, 1554 A-B, 1547-1584, in camera). However, no payments of this kind were ever made since costs of the services exceeded the amounts received by MBS. The broadcasts were over a closed FM circuit with range limited to the greater Pittsburgh area and none of the broadcasts went to any stores outside Pennsylvania (Tr. 954; CX 541-545). The broadcasts originated in Pittsburgh and the payments were made to MBS in Pittsburgh. Consequently, there was no interstate commerce involved in this arrangement. In addition, MBS attempted to notify all retail stores by placing ads in two newspapers of the availability of the service and by mailings to all grocery stores listed in the Yellow Pages of the Pittsburgh telephone directory. Personal contacts were made with retail grocers in an attempt to sell the service to retailers in the Pittsburgh area (Tr. 955-956). Consequently the examiner finds that this service as a practical matter was available to all grocery retailers and wholesalers in the Pittsburgh area. The contention of counsel supporting the complaint that these payments violated Section 2(e) is rejected.

29. Supermarket Broadcasting System (SBS), with its headquarters in Chicago, Illinois, provides in-store background music interspersed with advertisements of products of various participating suppliers over loudspeaker systems in retail grocery stores. Miscellaneous merchandising services are also provided by the retailer to the participating suppliers. Respondent made payments toward the cost of the SBS program broadcasting into retail outlets of three of its wholesale grocery customers: Golden Dawn Foods, Inc., Sharon, Pennsylvania, September 1962 to July 1965; Reeves Parvin & Co., Huntington, Pennsylvania, July 1962 to February 1964; and Charley Brothers Company, Greensburg, Pennsylvania, during 1965. The services provided by SBS are basically the same for each of the wholesalers with minor differences not here pertinent.

30. Golden Dawn Foods, Inc., sells to approximately 130 retail grocery stores, the majority of which operate under the Golden Dawn trade name. Approximately 80 of these Golden Dawn stores receive the SBS in-store broadcasting service and are located both in the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio (CX 643-712). During the three year period September 1962 to July 1965 respondent paid SBS nearly $9,000 for the music and advertising services in the Golden Dawn stores at the rate of $390 for each four week period. Reeves Parvin & Company sells to approximately 40 IGA stores located in Pennsylvania and one store in Hancock, Maryland, of which 30 receive the SBS in-store broadcasting service. During the period July 1962 to February 1964 respondent paid SBS approximately $2400 for the broadcasting service in the Reeves Parvin and IGA stores at the rate of $150 for a four week period (CX 715-805). Charley Brothers Company sells to approximately 150 retail grocers located in Pennsylvania with one store located in Bellaire, Ohio (Tr. 462; CX 596-598). Charley Brothers sells to a group of stores which it sponsors and assists, all of whom use the trade name "Red and White." These stores purchase all of their grocery products from Charley Brothers and in addition Charley Brothers sells to 100 contract stores who are independent and do not operate under the Red and White label. In 1965 respondent began paying SBS for broadcast services into the Charley Brothers' Red and White stores and continued these payments until July 1965 paying SBS in excess of $1,000 for such services at the rate of $278 for a four week period. As a part of the agreement with SBS respondent's products were advertised periodically over each of the retailers public address systems eight times a day and respondent received some additional merchandising and marketing services.

31. These three-way contracts between respondent, SBS and the wholesalers provided that SBS would pay each of the wholesalers a 50% rebate on all advertising net revenues paid to SBS by suppliers, including the respondent, where there were 15 or less such suppliers. The contract also provided that SBS would pay the wholesalers a rebate of 80% of the gross revenues received by SBS where there were more than 15 participating suppliers. As a result Golden Dawn was paid approximately $66,000 by SBS during the three-year period that respondent participated in the program. Only a small percentage of this total rebate to Golden Dawn, however, is attributable to respondent's payments to SBS. Reeves Parvin received rebates in excess of $5,000, a small percentage of which is attributable to respondent's payments to SBS. During the period April through July 1965, Charley Brothers received rebates totaling nearly $5,000, of which a small percentage is attributable to respondent's payments to SBS.

32. These wholesalers all handled respondent's products and in addition there were a number of other wholesalers competing with them who handled respondent's products of like grade and quality and who did not receive or were not offered like or similar services including the rebates. For example, the Tamarkin Company, a wholesaler located in Youngstown, Ohio, purchased products of like grade and quality to those sold by respondent to Golden Dawn and resold these products in competition with Golden Dawn in the Eastern portion of the State of Ohio (Tr. 357-361). A number of retailers to whom Tamarkin sold were in direct competition with Golden Dawn stores located in the State of Ohio. The Tamarkin Company was never advised of nor offered any like or similar services or facilities to those granted to Golden Dawn, Reeves Parvin or Charley Brothers.

33. These agreements and the payments made pursuant thereto and the products shipped by respondent to both favored and nonfavored wholesalers and retailers were made in the course of interstate commerce. SBS is an organization located in Chicago, Illinois. SBS billed the respondent from its Chicago office and respondent made payment to SBS's Chicago office and SBS paid the rebates to the favored wholesalers from its Chicago office. One of the favored wholesalers, Golden Dawn, had a substantial interstate business operating both in the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Golden Dawn stores located in both States received the services and facilities and rebates for which respondent provided the money. Consequently, it is found that these agreements and the payments made pursuant thereto were made in the course of commerce.

Respondent contends that it entered these agreements with SBS in good faith to meet like or similar offers of its competitors. This contention must be rejected. The evidence in the record merely indicates that some of respondent's competitors participated in these programs in the past and might have participated in the SBS programs with these three wholesalers had respondent failed to do so. The evidence is very general in nature and it does not appear that the respondent was meeting any specific offer of any of its competitors to participate in these programs but was merely reacting to the general competitive condition in the trade. In addition it should have been patent that these agreements were illegal, particularly in view of the fact of the substantial rebates which the wholesalers received from SBS. Consequently, respondent has failed to demonstrate that it knew that the offers, if such they were, made by competitors were lawful. Consequently, it is found that respondent has failed to establish that these payments to SBS were made in good faith to meet the like offers of a competitor or of competitors.

CONCLUSIONS

1. Respondent Viviano Macaroni Company has violated Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, by granting a favored customer, Loblaw, discriminatory prices during the year 1963 in the form of free goods, freight allowances and extended credit terms as found above.

2. The effect of these discriminations in price in favor of Loblaw may be and have been substantially to lessen competition or to injure, destroy or prevent competition between Loblaw and its competitors both wholesale and retail and retailer customers of wholesalers.

3. The discriminations in price granted to Loblaw were in the course of commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended.

4. Respondent has failed to prove that the discriminatory prices granted to Loblaw were made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.

5. The evidence in the record does not permit a conclusion that the respondent violated Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, in making its "off-the-car" sales as found above.

6. The payments made to State Food Stores do not violate Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended, since the respondent has established that these payments were made in good faith to meet the payments for services or facilities offered by a competitor.

7. The payments made to the Fox Grocery Company for radio and television advertising constitute a violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended, since they were not made available on proportionally equal terms to all customers of respondent competing with the Fox Grocery Company in the resale of respondent's products of like grade and quality.

8. The payments of respondent to the Fox Grocery Company and the sale of respondent's products to Fox and to Fox's competitors were made in the course of commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended.

9. The record will not support a finding that the payments made to By-Rite Markets, Inc., constitute a violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

10. The record will not support a conclusion that the prepayment of advertising allowances to Loblaw and five other of its customers constitute violations of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

11. The record will not support a conclusion that respondent's failure to offer its regular advertising and promotional agreements and contracts to its "off-the-car" customers constitutes a violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended, because of their de minimis nature and the fact that these customers were not considered by respondent to be its customers but rather customers of its wholesalers.

12. The payments made by respondent to Merchants Broadcasting System for supplying the retail outlets of certain customers of respondents with in-store background music containing advertisements of respondent's products and the supplying by retailers of other promotional activities cannot constitute a violation of Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, as amended, since neither the agreement nor the payments made pursuant thereto nor the shipment of any products to the stores receiving the background music can be considered to have been made in the course of commerce, as "commerce" is described in the Clayton Act, as amended.

13. The payments made by respondent to the Supermarket Broadcasting System for providing background music in the retail stores supplied by certain of respondent's wholesale customers constitute violations of Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, as amended, since they were made in the course of commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and were not accorded to all customers competing with the favored customers on proportionally equal terms.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondent Viviano Macaroni Company, a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly, indirectly, or through any corporate or other device, in or in connection with the sale of its macaroni products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the amended Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Discriminating, directly, or indirectly, in the price of such products of like grade and quality by selling to any purchaser at net prices higher than the net price charged any other purchaser who competes in the resale and distribution of respondent's products with the purchaser, or with customers of the purchaser, paying the higher price.
2. Paying or contracting for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of any customer of respondent as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of respondent's products, unless such payment or consideration is made available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products.
3. Furnishing, contracting to furnish, or contributing to the furnishing of services or facilities in connection with the handling, processing, sale or offering for sale of respondent's products to any purchaser of such products bought for resale, when such services or facilities are not accorded on proportionally equal terms to all other purchasers who resell such products in competition with any purchaser who receives such services or facilities.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

FEBRUARY 19, 1968

By DIXON, Commissioner:

This matter is before the Commission on cross-appeals from the hearing examiner's initial decision. The complaint, in three counts, charges respondent, a corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of macaroni products, with violating Sections 2(a) (Count I), 2(d) (Count II), and 2(e) (Count III) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

The hearing examiner found that the evidence sustained certain of the charges under each count and his proposed order prohibits violations of each of the three sections of the Clayton Act. Respondent has appealed from the examiner's findings of a violation under each of the three counts and complaint counsel's appeal is directed at the examiner's ruling that certain of the charges under Counts II and III have not been sustained. We will first consider respondent's appeal under each separate count.

COUNT I

The price discrimination charge under this count is based on respondent's dealings with a wholly owned subsidiary of the National Tea Company, the All-American Stamp and Premium Corporation, which, in 1963, operated a group of about 110 retail stores with division headquarters in Youngstown, Ohio. Most of these stores, which were located in eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania, were operated under the name Loblaw and the group will hereinafter be referred to by that name.

Prior to 1963, respondent had been selling certain items in its line of macaroni products to about fifty of these Loblaw stores located in western Pennsylvania. Sales were made at respondent's regular list prices and the goods were drop shipped to the individual stores. Billing for each shipment was sent to the Loblaw divisional office in Youngstown and payment was received from that office.

National Tea acquired the stock of the All-American Stamp and Premium Corporation in July 1962. As a result of this change in management, respondent entered into negotiations with Loblaw in an attempt to place its entire line of macaroni products in Loblaw's Youngstown warehouse. These negotiations took place at two meetings in January 1963 between respondent's principal officer, Mr. Samuel Viviano, and representatives of Loblaw.

The negotiations resulted in a package deal between respondent and Loblaw, the terms of which are not disputed. As found by the hearing examiner, respondent agreed:

- (1) To give Loblaw free goods in the amount equal to the first two orders placed by Loblaw for twenty-nine of respondent's macaroni products. This one-free-with-one offer on two orders was not limited as to the size of the orders that could be placed;
- (2) To sell its products to Loblaw at respondent's 350-case price regardless of the actual quantity purchased;
- (3) To grant Loblaw a freight allowance of $1.69 per hundred-weight for respondent's products which Loblaw was permitted to pick up in its own trucks at respondent's plant in Carnegie, Pennsylvania, and transport to Loblaw's Youngstown warehouse. This freight allowance was granted on the free goods as well as the products paid for by Loblaw:

(4) To extend its normal credit terms of 2%-10 days to 2%-20 days on all purchases by Loblaw.

Counsel supporting the complaint relied on these four provisions in the agreement in support of the price discrimination charge.¹ However, in sustaining this charge, the hearing examiner placed no reliance upon the provisions for sales to Loblaw at respondent's 350-case price. Complaint counsel have not raised this issue in their appeal.

It is not disputed that, as found by the hearing examiner, respondent granted Loblaw a freight allowance in the amount of $1.69 per hundredweight for at least the period from January to December 1963 (CX 40, 48, 50, 51, 61, 65, 67, 69, 71, 72, 74-102, 104-114, 117, 118, 1508-1530). Competitors of Loblaw, who were respondent's customers, testified that they did not receive, and were not offered, a freight allowance by respondent. Mr. Viviano testified unequivocally that respondent did not offer the $1.69 freight rate to all customers (Tr. 135). Additionally, the prices quoted on respondent's published price lists were delivered prices and there is no indication on these lists that respondent granted a freight allowance in any amount (CX 1, 2, 3).

Despite these undisputed facts, respondent's first argument on its appeal is that there is no substantial evidence that the $1.69 freight allowance to Loblaw was discriminatory. It is respondent's contention that the evidence establishes that this freight allowance was available to all customers who desired to pick up goods at the Viviano plant. The only evidence relied upon by respondent in support of this argument is the testimony of Mr. Viviano that his company used "the 5,000 pound rate as a freight allowance" for any customer who wanted to pick up the goods. However, Mr. Viviano's statement that this was "company policy" is considerably weakened by the fact that respondent's published price lists specifically state that freight is prepaid, and by the testimony of customers that they had never been offered a freight allowance. Aside from this, however, the record establishes that the 5,000 pound rate from respondent's plant in Carnegie to Loblaw's warehouse in Youngstown was $.94 (CX 1640a). Thus, giving full credence to the testimony of Mr. Viviano, the $1.69 rate granted to Loblaw was discriminatory. Respondent's further statement that where a customer bought smaller quantities the freight rate would increase accordingly, is literally true. However, respondent does not contend that it ever granted such increased rates and the evidence establishes that it did not. Mr. Viviano's testimony is that the 5,000 pound rate was granted regardless of the amount of the shipment and regardless of the location of the customer.

On this record, we find that the $1.69 per hundredweight freight allowance granted by respondent to Loblaw was discriminatory, and respondent's argument to the contrary is rejected.

Respondent's second argument is that its free goods offer to Loblaw was not discriminatory. The record in this regard discloses that for the three-month period beginning in May 1963, Loblaw received at least 6,600 free cases of respondent's products (CX 75-110). The record further establishes that during this period, customers of respondent who competed with Loblaw, did not receive and were not offered free goods by respondent.²

The evidence relied upon by respondent is the testimony of Mr. Viviano that for a period of from six to nine months, it was respondent's policy to make an introductory offer of one-free-with-one on two orders to potential customers. Contrary to respondent's argument, however, this testimony further establishes the discriminatory nature of the offer. Obviously, if this offer was available only to potential customers, a price discrimination was effected between Loblaw and respondent's established customers competing with Loblaw in the sale of respondent's products. This, of course, is aside from the question whether the discrimination had the required adverse effect on competition, which is another issue raised in respondent's appeal.

Additionally, respondent's argument on this issue ignores two critical factors. First, Loblaw was not truly a potential customer since it is undisputed that prior to the offer, respondent had been selling its products to about fifty stores in the Loblaw chain. Second, respondent would have us view the one-free-with-one offer as a separate introductory offer. This is obviously not the case with respect to Loblaw. Respondent's free goods offer to that customer was actually a part of a package deal, combined with other discriminatory terms having no time limitation, which must be considered as a continuing price discrimination.

We hold, on the foregoing facts, that respondent's free goods offer to Loblaw was discriminatory, and respondents argument to the contrary is also rejected.

As previously stated, Loblaw owned about 110 retail stores located in western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio. Representatives of other retail grocery stores, which were located in the same cities and within a short distance of the Loblaw stores, and which did not receive free goods, a freight allowance or extended cash discount terms from respondent, testified in support of the complaint. It is respondent's contention that the evidence does not support the examiner's finding that particular Viviano products were sold contemporaneously by any specific Loblaw stores and their competitors. Respondent relies on testimony of former Loblaw officials that at the time of the Loblaw-Viviano transaction, the Loblaw warehouse was carrying macaroni and noodle products of several of respondent's competitors and that all of the products stocked in the warehouse were not necessarily for sale in all Loblaw stores because the individual store managers usually exercised the prerogative of determining whose products and which items he carried in his store.

The facts disclose that respondent's sales to Loblaw increased from about $32,150 in 1962 when it serviced about fifty Loblaw stores in Pittsburgh with nine items, to about $293,800 in 1963 when it placed twenty-nine items in the Loblaw warehouse. By comparison, respondent's sales to the largest wholesale grocery company in Youngstown, the Tamarkin Company, totaled about $135,000 in 1963. This wholesaler sold to about 150 retailer accounts in Youngstown and respondent's products were by far its leading macaroni line.

In addition to the substantial volume of sales by respondent to Loblaw, the evidence discloses that respondent's products were the number two macaroni line in the Loblaw trading area and in the Loblaw stores. Also, complaint counsel introduced into evidence representative Loblaw newspaper advertisements, offering Viviano products, which were published in 1963 in various cities in which nonfavored customers were located. One of these advertisements (CX 1631), published on May 1, 1963, bears the address of nineteen Loblaw stores in the Youngstown trading area.

In further considering respondent's argument, it is to be noted that a former Loblaw official testified that, after the agreement with Viviano was entered into, shipment of respondent's products was delayed in order that the line of macaroni products which Loblaw had in its Youngstown area stores at that time might be replaced. Obviously, therefore, the prerogative of the individual store managers in deciding which brand of macaroni to carry was severely limited.

In these circumstances it would be wholly unrealistic to conclude, as respondent contends, that individual Loblaw stores were not shown to have competed with nonfavored retail grocers in the sale of Viviano products. As held by the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in the Tri-Valley case,³ evidence tracing particular products to the shelves of two competing customers is not necessary.

Thus, the facts of record in this case fully support the examiner's findings that respondent's products were sold contemporaneously by the favored Loblaw stores and their nonfavored competitors.⁴

We next consider respondent's argument that the price discriminations resulting from its deal with Loblaw did not have the necessary potential to adversely affect competition within the meaning of Section 2(a). In substance, respondent refers to the hearing examiner's finding that Loblaw received somewhere between 10% and 12% discount on its 1963 purchase of Viviano products and contends that the examiner erred in concluding that the benefits received by Loblaw were of a continuing nature. Respondent says, for example, that the Viviano offer was "introductory," and "nonrecurrent," and constituted a "single transaction."

The Commission notes in this connection that there is no evidence that the combination offer of free goods, freight allowance and extended credit terms was made to introduce respondent's products into the store of any other potential purchaser. It was "introductory" to Loblaw only in the sense that it induced that customer to substantially increase its purchases from respondent for at least a year at a price lower than its competitors paid for the same goods. While the offer and acceptance may constitute a "single transaction," there was a continuing price discrimination on every shipment of Viviano goods to Loblaw from January 1963 until some time in 1964.

³ Tri-Valley Packing Ass'n v. Federal Trade Commission, 329 F. 2d 694 (9th Cir. 1964). The court held that where it is shown that the customers are operating on a particular functional level, such as retailing, it is only necessary to establish that:

"* * * one [customer] has outlets in such geographical proximity to those of the other as to establish that the two customers are in general competition, and that the two customers purchased goods of the same grade and quality from the seller within approximately the same period of time. Actual competition in the sale of the seller's goods may then be inferred even though one or both of the customers have other outlets which are not in geographical proximity to outlets of the other customer."

⁴ It is to be further noted that in our decision In the Matter of Sunbeam Corporation, Docket No. 7409 (1965) [67 F.T.C. 20], involving discriminatory promotional payments, we held that where complaint counsel has shown that some of the favored and disfavored customers are located in the same local trade area, the burden shifts to respondent to produce evidence that such customers were not competing in the distribution of the products. We think the same rule applies in a matter involving alleged discriminatory pricing, and respondent has not met that burden in this case.

While arguing that the benefits to Loblaw from the combination offer were not of a continuing nature, respondent would also view the free goods offer as separate and apart from the freight allowance and extension of credit terms. Respondent's contention is that, since the great majority of the free goods (86%) were shipped in the period from May 6 to June 11, 1963, there is no likelihood of injury to competing purchasers.

In considering the benefits accruing to Loblaw, the free goods offer cannot be so readily isolated from the freight allowance and extension of credit terms. That Loblaw itself was concerned with the benefits of the combination offer is shown by the fact that it refused to accept the free offer and a substantially lower freight allowance when first offered by respondent. Moreover, the interrelationship between the terms of the offer is evidenced by the fact that the discriminatory freight allowance, totaling about $2,200, was granted on the free goods shipments.

Even assuming, however, that the terms of the agreement can be considered separately, we believe that the discrimination resulting from the free goods offer alone could easily have a seriously adverse competitive effect.

The undisputed facts are that the free offer consisted of granting one case free with each case purchased on two unlimited orders covering twenty-nine of respondent's products. Loblaw received at least 6,601 free cases, having a total dollar value of $25,288. Since Loblaw's purchases of Viviano products for the year 1963 totaled about $293,800, this constitutes a discount of over 8% on Loblaw's yearly purchases.

These facts must be considered in light of the competitive situation existing in the retail sale of food products in market areas in which respondent's products were sold. The examiner, in considering this question, found that there is severe competition at all levels in the food industry and particularly in the macaroni industry. This finding is not disputed and is fully supported by the record. Representatives of retail grocery stores and wholesalers testified that the cost of goods and retail prices determine their ability to compete. They further testified that they find it necessary to take advantage of the 2% cash discount offered by suppliers and that these discounts are a vital factor in their profit and loss figures. Documentary evidence establishes the extremely low profit margins in the retail grocery industry.

The Supreme Court has stated that " * * * § 2(a) does not require a finding that the discriminations in price have in fact had an adverse effect on competition. The statute is designed to reach such discriminations 'in their incipency,' before the harm to competition is effected. It is enough that they 'may' have the prescribed effect."⁵

The court applied this test in the Edelmann case⁶ where the market conditions were substantially identical with those established in this record. There, as here, purchasers of respondent's products sold in a market where competition was keen; these purchasers operated on small profit margins; and differentials of small amounts were important in the trade. In view of these market conditions, the court sustained the Commission's findings that the competitive opportunities of the less favored purchasers were injured when they had to pay substantially more for respondent's products than their competitors had to pay.

There is testimony in this record that a difference of a few pennies a box in the retail price of macaroni is sufficient to gain a sale for the grocer with the lower price. The evidence also establishes that as a result of receiving the free goods, Loblaw reduced prices and ran special displays and advertising on respondent's products. Thus, the price discrimination resulting from the free goods gave this favored customer a very substantial initial competitive advantage which it was able to maintain by virtue of the other two aspects of the package deal, the discriminatory freight allowance and the discriminatory extension of credit terms.

This brings us to respondent's further argument that the freight allowance merely reflected its savings from Loblaw's assumption of delivery costs. It is respondent's contention that the $1.69 rate was the official less-than-truckload rate established by the Interstate Commerce Commission and state regulatory tariff schedules and reflects the exact freight rate respondent paid in drop shipping the individual Loblaw-Pittsburgh stores prior to the January 1963 transaction.

In the first place, the $1.69 rate was the 1963 common carrier rate for less-than-truckload shipments from Carnegie to Youngstown. Prior to 1963, respondent shipped only to Loblaw's Pittsburgh stores which were near its Carnegie plant. More importantly, Mr. Viviano testified that respondent used its own trucks in making deliveries in Pittsburgh and Youngstown. Also, at least during 1963, Loblaw used its own trucks which had made Pittsburgh deliveries, to pick up products at the Viviano plant. Under the circumstances, common carrier rates have no relationship to the actual costs that were involved, and this record is devoid of any evidence as to actual delivery costs, either as to respondent or Loblaw, which would support respondent's argument that the $1.69 rate reflected its savings. Moreover, as we have previously stated, respondent's price lists set forth three categories of delivered prices for each item, intended to reflect the differing costs of freight between each weight category on drop shipments. An example of respondent's calculated freight savings on one such price list, effective March 14, 1963, shows a difference in price on respondent's 20-1 pound cartons of Naples type products of just three cents between each of the price categories. Under these circumstances, respondent's argument that the $1.69 per hundred freight allowance merely reflected its savings as a result of the Loblaw transaction is rejected.

It must be here noted that, while the hearing examiner concluded that the extension of credit from 2%-10 days to 2%-20 days granted by respondent to Loblaw as part of the package deal was discriminatory, he did not make a specific finding on this point nor did he discuss the evidence relating thereto.

Respondent does not take issue with the hearing examiner's conclusion which is fully supported by the facts of record. Mr. Viviano testified that 2%-10 days were respondent's normal credit terms and these terms are set forth on respondent's price lists which were in effect at that time (CX 1, 2, 3). Additionally, customers competing with Loblaw stores in the sale of respondent's products testified that they were never offered credit terms of 2%-20 days. We find, therefore, that by granting Loblaw extended credit terms, respondent discriminated between competing customers.

The evidence which the examiner failed to discuss deals with the adverse competitive effect of this aspect of the discriminatory package deal. Thus, one of respondent's large customers who was not offered the extended credit terms testified that "In 20 days, the chances are that the merchandise we would have bought would have been sold by that time, and in most cases the moneys would have been collected for it and, in effect, we would have been operating on Vimco's money" (Tr. 346-347). He further stated that his company borrows short term money to enable it to meet discount terms of its suppliers and that "If we had an extra ten days, that would give us a half million dollars of extra capital in our business" (Tr. 347). Several other nonfavored customers testified that an extension of credit to 2%-20 days would be significant and a definite advantage for the reason that this would enable them to sell the products before they have to pay for them, thus giving them more cash to use in other ways (Tr. 314, 1094, 1118, 1208).

Considering this testimony in light of the intensively competitive situation existing in the retail food industry, we find that respondent's discriminatory extension of credit terms to Loblaw, even considered separate and apart from the other discriminatory price reductions in its package deal, may have the effect of substantially lessening competition.

As a final argument on the issue of competitive injury, respondent states that a comparison of Loblaw's competitive state with the various retailers called as injury witnesses in this proceeding rebutted any inference of possible adverse effect on competition. The premise for this argument, that Loblaw was losing money before, during and after 1963, does not find support in this record. The only evidence on this point is the testimony of the Loblaw Youngstown division manager, Mr. Malt, who did not take that position until March 1964. Although asked several times by complaint counsel whether the division was profitable when he arrived there, Mr. Malt would only reply that "I wish that it were." Upon further questioning by the hearing examiner, Mr. Malt indicated that he considered such information to be a trade secret. Clearly, this witness' testimony is of no value in establishing the financial condition of Loblaw in 1963. Additionally, during the period of the price discrimination, Loblaw was a wholly owned subsidiary of the National Tea Company which, the record does show, enjoyed a profit in 1963. There is no evidence as to the organization and internal operation of the National Tea Company which would require that the competitive state of its Loblaw subsidiary be determined separate and apart from the overall operation of the company.

After fully considering the arguments presented by respondent on this issue, the Commission finds that the evidence sustains the examiner's conclusion that the effect of respondent's price discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition between Loblaw and its non-favored competitors.

We next consider respondent's argument that the hearing examiner erred in rejecting its affirmative defense under Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act by finding that respondent had failed to establish that its lower prices to Loblaw were made in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low price. We will consider respondent's argument under the test laid down by the Supreme Court in the Staley case⁷ wherein it was held that the statute requires the seller "to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor."

The facts relied upon by respondent are primarily the thirty-five year's experience of Mr. Viviano in the macaroni business, and the testimony of two former employees of Loblaw.

As previously mentioned, the agreement between Loblaw and respondent, which included the free goods, freight allowance and extended credit terms, was reached as a result of two meetings between these parties in January 1963. The first meeting was attended by Mr. Viviano and by Mr. John Dickson, the assistant sales manager of Loblaw's Youngstown-Pittsburgh Division. Mr. Viviano and Mr. Dickson were also present at the second meeting, as well as Mr. Dickson's superior, Mr. Charles Marcey.

These meetings were prompted by the fact that after the change of ownership of Loblaw in July 1962, Loblaw was approached by a number of potential macaroni suppliers who urged Loblaw to take on their products. Mr. Viviano testified that he "figured" these competitors were LaRosa and Sons, Procino & Rossi, San Giorgio, Gioia Macaroni Co., and Ideal Macaroni Co. Thus, respondent contends that it knew the specific identity of its competitors for the reason that the record shows that the first three of these companies made offers to Loblaw, and these offers are a matter of record.

In support of this contention, respondent relies on the testimony of Mr. Dickson and Mr. Marcey, neither of whom was still employed by Loblaw at the time of his testimony, and upon two physical exhibits. Respondent does not contend that these persons identified the competitors and it is clear from this record that neither of these individuals mentioned the names of any of respondent's competitors in their meetings with Mr. Viviano. In fact, neither could remember whether he had even told Mr. Viviano that respondent was talking with other macaroni companies. Instead, respondent's argument is that, from Mr. Viviano's experience in the market, he knew which competitors were likely to make offers to Loblaw, and the testimony of Dickson and Marcey that they had received offers from LaRosa, Procino & Rossi and San Giorgio prior to their meetings with Mr. Viviano simply confirmed his belief. However, this testimony can be given little weight. In rebuttal, complaint counsel adduced testimony from the representatives of each of these companies who would have the authority to make such offers. The San Giorgio representative testified unequivocally that his company did not make an offer to Loblaw. Although Procino & Rossi made an offer, it was not submitted until after the date of the second meeting with Loblaw, as established by the testimony of Mr. Viviano and Mr. Marcey. LaRosa did make an offer prior to respondent's negotiations with Loblaw. However, the LaRosa representative testified that he quoted only the regular prices on LaRosa's secondary line out of courtesy to Mr. Dickson, who had requested an offer, since his company was not ready to enter the Youngstown market.

The testimony of the former Loblaw officials is further discredited by the fact that contrary to their assertions that Loblaw had not received written offers, the offers made by LaRosa (for regular prices only) and Procino & Rossi (made after the second Loblaw-Viviano meeting) were submitted to Loblaw in writing and are a matter of record in this proceeding (CX 1714, 1718).

While we do not hold that it is necessary for respondent to specifically identify its competitors to establish a Section 2(b) defense, we do find that respondent's reliance upon its alleged knowledge of the specific identity of its competitors who made offers to Loblaw, as evidence of its good faith in granting a discriminatory price, is not supported on this record.

We turn next to the question of whether respondent has shown sufficient facts to lead a reasonable person to believe that its lower price was responsive to the lower price of any competitor who may have been negotiating with Loblaw for its Youngstown macaroni business.

In the Staley case, supra, the facts as stipulated were that the discriminations were made in response to verbal information from buyers and salesmen to the effect that one or more competitors had granted or offered to grant like discriminations. Moreover, it was stipulated that Staley granted price discriminations on the belief that such reports were true. However, the court referred to the lack of diligence on the part of Staley to verify the reports and stated that "The good faith of the discrimination must be shown in the face of the fact that the seller is aware that his discrimination is unlawful, unless good faith is shown, and in circumstances which are peculiarly favorable to price discrimination abuses" (emphasis added). In the case before us, we have the prime example of such favorable circumstances, a large chain store organization negotiating with suppliers to obtain a lower price for a staple food product.

The facts relied upon by respondent are not as strong as those stipulated in the Staley case. There is no evidence, nor does respondent contend, that it had been informed as to the offers made by its competitors. Mr. Viviano, in answer to a question from respondent's counsel, specifically testified that he didn't know how respondent's offer compared with those of his competitors. More importantly, the evidence does not support a finding that respondent made a diligent effort to investigate or verify any possible competitive offers. We do have the self-serving testimony of Mr. Viviano that he twice asked Mr. Dickson the nature of competitive offers, which information was not given him. However, Mr. Dickson failed to support this testimony, stating first that Mr. Viviano had not asked and then, later, only that he "may have asked." There is no evidence that Mr. Marcey was asked, nor is there any evidence that respondent made any other attempt to learn the nature of any competitor's offer.

Respondent places reliance upon the testimony of Mr. Dickson that he told Mr. Viviano that "we had offers equally as good as his." However, this testimony can be given little weight. First, such a statement could be made only after respondent had made an offer and in no way reflects that respondent was responding to a competitor's offer. Second, Mr. Dickson's testimony was refuted by his superior, Mr. Marcey, who was present at the second meeting when the discriminatory freight allowance was added to the deal. In answer to the question as to the conversation with Mr. Viviano, Mr. Marcey stated:

It wasn't a matter of telling him anything. It was a matter of discussing a proposal, not saying to him that we have anything because we didn't do business that way. I am sure that we did not say to him "We have a deal better than yours or equal to yours," or anything like that, or we didn't tell him what the other deals were because it was against the policy of the company to do business that way. (Tr. 1514.)

The most that can be said for respondent's Section 2(b) defense is that it had general knowledge, known in the trade, that Loblaw was interested in obtaining a macaroni supplier for its Youngstown ware house. This was obviously not a situation, which often prevails, where a supplier has to react immediately to information received from a buyer or a salesman in order to retain the business of a customer. Instead, the facts show that this price discrimination was the result of negotiations over a course of time between a chain store buyer and a supplier whose product had consumer preference and ranked second in sales in the trade area. It was simply a situation of a large buyer attempting to get the best price it could from a seller who was willing to grant price concessions to obtain the business. As we have stated in the Knoll case⁸ " * * * if it appears from the evidence and he [the supplier] would have sold to favored purchasers at the lower discriminatory price regardless of the price at which his rival sold, it cannot be said that he was meeting a competitor's price in good faith even though it can later be established that his competitor was also selling at the lower price."

We conclude that respondent has failed in its burden of establishing that its discriminatory price was granted to meet the equally low price of a competitor.

Respondent's appeal from the hearing examiner's finding that the respondent has violated Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act in its dealings with Loblaw is denied.

COUNT II

Respondent has appealed from the hearing examiner's ruling that its promotional payments to Fox Grocery Company violated Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act.

The facts concerning the payments to Fox are not disputed. Fox, a wholesale grocery company, has its headquarters and warehouse in Belle Vernon, Pennsylvania, and serves over two hundred retail grocer accounts located in four States. It has carried the complete line of respondent's macaroni products for fifteen to twenty years.

Beginning in January 1963, respondent paid Fox varying amounts for spot announcements on television and radio programs sponsored by Fox and featuring products sold by Foodland Stores, a voluntary chain of supermarkets supplied by Fox. Respondent's participation on these programs began when the programs were initiated and was maintained on a continuous basis through the date of the hearings in March 1966. During the first three years (1963-1965) respondent paid Fox in excess of $20,000 for these spot announcements. Fox's purchases from respondent during this period totaled $579,577. Fox also carried macaroni products of two other suppliers, Procino & Rossi and Muellers, but respondent's products outsold the other brands by 5 to 1.

Respondent had other wholesale grocery purchasers who competed with Fox and whose customers competed with Foodland markets in West Virginia, Maryland, Ohio and Pennsylvania. Respondent concedes that it did not make like or similar promotional payments available to these competitors.

Respondent's first argument under this count is that the requisite jurisdiction was lacking in its transactions with Fox. It contends that the payments were made to Fox in Pennsylvania, respondent's products were shipped to Fox's Pennsylvania warehouse, and the participating radio and TV stations paid by Fox are located in Pennsylvania. Accordingly, it is respondent's argument that the promotional payments were not made in the course of interstate commerce, as required by the statute.⁹

It is established in this record that respondent is engaged in interstate commerce and that Fox is engaged in interstate commerce. Foodland Stores is a voluntary chain, purchasing all of its supplies from Fox, as distinguished from Contract stores which are independent stores which buy from Fox only if they so desire (Tr. 760). There are Foodland markets located in states other than Pennsylvania, which are served by Fox and, during the period of the discriminatory promotional payments, seven of these stores located in Wheeling, West Virginia, were wholly owned by Fox. The contract between respondent and Fox provided that the Foodland markets would stock the products featured on the spot commercials (CX 1537). The television station carrying these commercials televises into the three out-of-state areas in which the Foodland markets are located (CX 494e). Additionally, contrary to respondent's contention, the testimony of the Fox representative establishes that a Wheeling, West Virginia, radio station was employed to broadcast the Fox sponsored Foodland commercials paid for by respondent (Tr. 776).

In the Shreveport case,¹⁰ the court stated:

* * * we have a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce making an allowance to two food chain customers who are also engaged in interstate commerce in connection with products sold only in intrastate competition, but with the allowance being made or used in interstate commerce. This, we think, meets the test of the statute that the allowance payments be made in the course of the commerce that Petitioner was engaged in at the time.

The court further stated that: "We do not read the statute to qualify payment in the 'course of * * * commerce,' once that appears, by a further requirement that the payment be in connection with goods sold in interstate commerce, resold in interstate commerce, or that competition between competing customers be in interstate commerce where there is ample nexus to interstate commerce in the whole transaction as here."

On the facts of this case, the court's holding in the Shreveport case fully disposes of respondent's jurisdictional argument. Accordingly, we find that respondent's discriminatory promotional payments to

⁹ Section 2(d) provides, in part, that:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce. * * *"

¹⁰ Shreveport Macaroni Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 321 F. 2d 404 (5th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 971.

Fox were in the course of commerce, and respondent's argument on this issue is rejected.

Other than the commerce issue, there is no contention by respondent that the facts concerning its payments to Fox do not establish a prima facie violation of Section 2(d). However, respondent argues that its payments to Fox were made to meet the specific competitive offers of two other macaroni suppliers, Procino & Rossi and La Premiata Macaroni Company, and were therefore justified under Section 2(b).

Procino & Rossi products were in the Fox warehouse at the time Fox initiated the radio-TV show. La Premiata was not a supplier of Fox at that time. The hearing examiner, relying on the evidence that Fox has been a customer of respondent for a number of years, that respondent's products were Fox's largest selling macaroni product by 5 to 1 over any other competitor's, and that respondent's payments for the radio-TV show were over and above its regular cooperative advertising payments, held that it should have been clear to respondent that "for either of its competitors to make like or similar payments, in view of their weak position with Fox, would have been clearly unlawful."

We do not find it necessary to rule on this holding by the examiner since, in our opinion, respondent's Section 2(b) defense fails for other reasons.

It is respondent's position that this is the "classic situation" for the application of that defense for the reason that the competitors were identified and the amounts of their offers were known.

In the first place, it is not clearly established that respondent knew the identity of the competitors since Mr. Viviano testified only that he "suspected the other macaroni company was one of these three: Gioia, P & R and San Giorgio." Be that as it may, we do not think the evidence supports respondent's contention that it knew the amount of any competitor's offer.

Respondent's support for this argument is the testimony of Mr. Kemper, Fox vice president, that the prices charged for advertising on the Fox program was the same for all macaroni manufacturers. Thus, it is respondent's position that the amount which it paid to Fox is the amount which competitors would have offered in order to participate on the program. Aside from the fact that there is no indication that any such information was conveyed to respondent, Mr. Kemper's further testimony on this subject must be considered. He specifically testified that all participants on the TV program did not take the same number of spots, stating that "They could not, because we would not sell their products sufficiently for them to afford it" (Tr. 785). He further testified that some suppliers took "one or two spots, three spots" and participated intermittently on an "in-and-out basis" (Tr. 771).

In our view, the testimony relied upon by respondent could only mean that suppliers were all charged the same amount per spot announcement, and not that all suppliers would pay the same overall amount.

It is, of course, well settled that a supplier claiming the Section 2(b) defense does not have to establish the exact amount of a competitor's offer. However, under Staley, supra, the supplier does have the burden of taking steps to investigate competitive offers and thus to learn the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of promotional payments would do no more than meet the payments of a competitor. We recognize that we are here dealing with a Section 2(b) defense to a violation under Section 2(d) whereas the Staley case involved Section 2(a). However, it has been judicially recognized that the Section 2(b) principles announced in the Staley decision also apply in a Section 2(d) case. Exquisite Form Brassiere, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F. 2d 492 (D.C. Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 959 (1966).

In this case, we have only the vague and general testimony of the Fox representative that he told respondent that competitors "would support the program" and that he "laid the cards on the table." Respondent's representative testified only that he was told that if he didn't take the radio-TV deal, "another macaroni company was going on." Respondent knew that its payments to Fox were over and above its regular cooperative promotional payments and that its products far outsold any other macaroni products in the Fox warehouse. Also, as testified to by Mr. Kemper, there were no other TV programs like this one in the market. Despite these facts, there is no evidence that respondent made any effort to learn the nature of any competitive offers. Clearly, this record establishes an "entire lack of a showing of diligence on the part of respondents to verify the reports" of competitive offers.¹¹

We think respondent's good faith defense fails for one additional reason. Its payments to Fox began in January 1963 and continued for at least three years. The contract with Fox was renewed annually. Complaint counsel established by the testimony of the Fox representative that no other macaroni supplier "has attempted to get on the program" since it was initiated and that "we have not solicited anybody" (Tr. 786). In view of this testimony, we think there was a burden upon respondent to show facts which would lead it to believe that a continuation of the discriminatory payments was necessary. Respondent made no attempt to do so and its failure evidences a lack of good faith as required by Section 2(b).

On this record, we hold that respondent has failed to sustain the burden imposed upon it by Section 2(b) in its promotional payments to Fox. Accordingly, its appeal on this issue is denied.

COUNT III

The order issued by the hearing examiner under this count arises from payments made by respondent to Supermarket Broadcasting System (SBS). The facts concerning these payments are not in dispute.

As found by the examiner, SBS, which is located in Chicago, Illinois, provides in-store background music interspersed with advertisements of products of various participating suppliers over loud-speaker systems in retail grocery stores. Respondent made payments toward the cost of the SBS program broadcast into retail outlets of three of its wholesale grocery customers, as follows:

Golden Dawn Foods, Inc., Sharon, Pennsylvania, September 1962 to July 1965, $9,000.

Reeves Parvin & Co., Huntington, Pennsylvania, July 1962 to February 1964, $2,400.

Charley Brothers Company, Greensburg, Pennsylvania, 1965, $1,000.

The agreement between respondent and SBS provided that respondent's products would be advertised over each of the retailer's public address systems eight times a day. The contract between SBS and the wholesaler provided that SBS would pay each of the wholesalers a 50 percent rebate on all advertising net revenues paid to SBS by suppliers.

The examiner found that respondent had other wholesale customers who competed with the three wholesalers receiving the SBS services and that the other wholesale customers did not receive and were not offered like or similar services. He further found that retail customers of the favored wholesalers competed with retail customers of nonfavored wholesalers. He held that the discriminatory services furnished by respondent through SBS violated Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, and he rejected respondent's Section 2(b) defense.

Respondent does not contest the examiner's finding of illegality. Its position is that the circumstances are such that it is not in the public interest to issue an order. The alleged circumstances are that respondent was not aware of the rebate by SBS to wholesalers, that SBS advised respondent that the program was offered and available to all food outlets in respondent's trade area, and that SBS further advised that the program was completely legal.

With reference to the rebate, the evidence shows that the practice was for respondent's representative to meet with representatives of the favored wholesalers and SBS to discuss the program prior to respondent's participation. Moreover, the Golden Dawn representative indicated that respondent's representative was aware of the terms of the contract between SBS and the wholesaler (Tr. 444). This contract specifically provides for a rebate from the advertising revenue to be paid to the wholesaler (CX 645c). Under the circumstances, little weight can be given to respondent's testimony that it was unaware of the rebate. In any event, the legality of the plan does not depend upon the rebate provision and respondent's alleged lack of knowledge is of no consequence. As found by the examiner, the violation results from the fact that respondent furnished services through SBS to three customers upon terms not accorded to competing purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

Respondent cites the testimony of the SBS representative (Tr. 1045-1046) in support of its statement that SBS advised it that the program was available to all food outlets. Quite plainly, the SBS representative did not so testify. His comments, relied upon by respondent, relate only to the question of whether the program could be used by small grocery stores. Additionally, the contract between respondent and SBS does not support respondent's position. In the contracts initially entered into between these parties, SBS warranted that "the use of its system is available to any appropriate food trade group." Aside from the fact that SBS apparently determined which group was "appropriate," it is clear that respondent had customers which were not members of a food trade group and were therefore precluded from participation.

Section 2(e) imposes upon a supplier furnishing a service or facility to a customer the burden of assuring that such service or facility is accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms. Here, respondent made no attempt to assume that burden. In the first place, respondent did not even furnish SBS, upon whose representations it allegedly relied, a list of its customers. The testimony of Mr. Viviano establishes that respondent was well aware that the SBS in-store program was being used by only a few of its customers and not by their competitors who were likewise respondent's customers. Additionally, Mr. Viviano testified that although he knew that SBS had records showing to whom the programs were offered, and was advised that he could see these records, he made no attempt to do so.

The nonfavored customers in this case were respondent's and not SBS' customers. There is no authority for respondent's attempted delegation of its burden to SBS and, under the facts of this case, its reliance thereon, rather than militating against an order, establishes the need for a prohibition against future violations.

We find no substance in respondent's further contention that it was informed by SBS officials that the program was legal. The testimony of the wholesalers who were present at the meetings with all three parties, does not support this contention. Moreover, we fail to see how such information, if given, could carry any weight. SBS was attempting to obtain suppliers to participate in its program, which was its sole business operation, and it is certainly to be expected that it would represent the program as being legal. Despite the obvious self-serving nature of any representations by SBS, respondent made no attempt to verify the lawfulness of its payments to SBS, well knowing that other competing customers were not being accorded equal treatment. Moreover, it is to be noted that the lawfulness of the SBS program is not really in issue. It is respondent's discriminatory participation in the program which was found by the examiner to be illegal.

Under the foregoing circumstances, we think a prohibition in the order against the future use of such illegal practices is required in the public interest and we, therefore, deny respondent's appeal on this count.

PROCEDURAL ISSUE

Just prior to the first hearing in this case, respondent filed an application for inspection and copying of documents in the possession of the Commission pertaining to all witnesses whom respondent had been notified would be called as witnesses by complaint counsel. Certain of the documents requested were letters written to the Commission by such persons and copies of letters sent to them by the Commission, and all written statements given by them. At the first hearing, agreement was reached as to these documents and they were made available to respondent's counsel.

In addition, respondent's application requested "All memoranda of meetings, interviews and/or telephone conversations made by Commission personnel" with all prospective Commission witnesses. The examiner certified this portion of the application to the Commission which, by order and accompanying opinion issued on March 9, 1966, denied the request.

Respondent now requests that we reconsider our denial in the light of our decision in Inter-State Builders, Inc., Docket No. 8624, April 22, 1966 [69 F.T.C. 1152]. Also, respondent contends that our previous ruling was erroneous under the Jencks rule.¹²

In the Inter-State Builders decision, after reviewing at length the requirements of the Jencks rule, we remanded the case to the hearing examiner with directions that he examine interview reports prepared by Commission investigators of interviews with witnesses who had testified in the proceeding to determine whether or not such reports were required under the Jencks rule to be made available to the respondents for the purpose of cross-examining and impeaching such witnesses. We held that the Jencks rule required that any written statements prepared or approved by a witness relating to the subject matter of such witness' testimony together with any written statement which represented a substantially verbatim transcription of any oral statements given to a Commission investigator by such witness must, under the circumstances of that case, be made available to respondents' counsel.

In reaching our decision in the Inter-State Builders case, we pointed out certain requirements that must be met in order for the Jencks rule to apply in an administrative proceeding. Insofar as this present proceeding is concerned, we concluded that Jencks statements may not be demanded until after the witness in question has testified on direct examination. The reason for this requirement, as we pointed out, is that in some instances the witness might not ultimately be called upon to testify and in other instances a witness' testimony might be unrelated to prior statements which he made. Second, we held that under court decisions, respondent's counsel must make some showing that a statement has been made to the government or that a report of an interview with the witness has been prepared by a government agent.

In our decision of March 9, 1966 [69 F.T.C. 1104, 1106], denying respondent's prehearing request for witness interview reports in the present case, we expressly stated that:

If there is any question whether or not the report is a statement within the scope of Section 2(e) of the statute (Jencks Act), the examiner may inspect the document and make a determination. But that would not occur until after the witness takes the stand.

¹² Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657 (1957). The rule laid down in that decision was codified in statutory form in what is known as the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. 3500.

Nowhere throughout this entire proceeding did respondent's counsel make any request of the examiner to inspect any document for such purpose. Nor does respondent even contend that such request was made. Moreover, respondent's counsel did not ask or otherwise make any attempt to show that a report of an interview with any witness who testified on behalf of complaint counsel had been prepared by a government agent. Given an opportunity to do so, respondent made no attempt to comply with the provision in our decision for invoking the Jencks rule, which provision is entirely consistent with our holding in Inter-State Builders.¹³ Accordingly, respondent's request that we reconsider on March 9, 1966, ruling in the light of the Inter-State Builders decision and the Jencks rule, must be rejected.

In this same connection, respondent contends that the examiner was inconsistent and erred in requiring its counsel to produce a memorandum prepared by one of respondent's counsel of his interview with a defense witness, Mr. Dickson.

We find no substance in this argument. As previously stated, respondent's counsel agreed on the record to accept complaint counsel's proposal to turn over to the hearing examiner all letters and written statements sent to the Commission by complaint counsel's witnesses, and all letters sent by the Commission to those witnesses. Such documents were, in fact, produced. Complaint counsel requested similar documents that respondent may have received from its witnesses. One such document produced by respondent was a copy of a letter it had received from one of its witnesses, Mr. Dickson. This letter disclosed that respondent's counsel had forwarded to Mr. Dickson a memorandum of an interview he had had with that witness for that witness' comment. The record shows that, in his letter, Mr. Dickson stated that the memorandum was substantially correct except for certain corrections he was making. Complaint counsel argued that the memorandum thereby became an adopted statement of the witness and that they should have it for the purpose of cross-examination. The examiner so ordered.

Respondent does not dispute the facts. Nor does it argue that the witness Dickson did not adopt or approve the interview report. Moreover, there is no contention by respondent that complaint counsel had in their possession any witness interview reports which had even been seen by a witness. Respondent simply asserts that the examiner was inconsistent and erred in requiring it to produce the Dickson interview report while complaint counsel was not required to produce any witness interview reports they may have had in their possession.

¹³ The court has stated with reference to a Jencks Act statement that " * * * the defendant must plainly tender to the Court the question of the producibility of the document at a time when it is possible for the Court to order it produced, or to make an appropriate inquiry. If he fails to do so he may not assert, on appeal, that failure to order production or to undertake further inquiry was error." Ogden v. United States, 303 F. 2d 724, 733 (9th Cir. 1962).

Opinion

Clearly, there was no inconsistency in the examiner's rulings. The obvious reason for the difference in his rulings is the undisputed fact that respondent's witness approved and adopted his interview report.¹⁴ That such reports may be required to be produced for cross-examination purposes is well settled.¹⁵ Campbell v. United States, supra; United States v. Lamma, 349 F.2d 338 (2d Cir. 1965).

Although we find that, contrary to respondent's argument, the examiner was consistent in his ruling on this issue, we note that the examiner required the production of the Dickson interview report prior to the testimony of that witness. In this respect, he was in error. Cases decided prior to the examiner's ruling on this point have held that "Jencks statements" need not be produced until after a witness has testified on direct examination.¹⁶ However, at the time of the examiner's ruling, respondent's counsel did not object on the grounds that production at that time was premature nor did they take an interlocutory appeal from the examiner's ruling.

The record discloses that Mr. Dickson took the stand immediately after the examiner's ruling. We have reviewed the testimony of Mr. Dickson on direct examination and we find that it expressly relates to the statements made in the report of the interview in question. Obviously, therefore, complaint counsel would have been entitled to the report for cross-examination purposes after the witness' direct testimony. Respondent does not contend nor has it shown that it was prejudiced or in any way put at a disadvantage as a result of the premature production of the report. Under the foregoing circumstances, we find that respondent was not deprived of a fair hearing as a result of the examiner's action and, accordingly, respondent's appeal on this issue is denied.

COMPLAINT COUNSEL'S APPEAL

Count II

Complaint counsel have appealed from the examiner's rulings dismissing certain of the charges under this Section 2(d) count.

¹⁴ Campbell v. United States, 373 U.S. 487 (1963). The fact that the witness did not sign the report is immaterial. Bergman v. United States, 253 F.2d 933 (6th Cir. 1958).

¹⁵ In our decision in the Inter-State Builders case, we expressly held that any written statement approved by a witness relating to the subject matter of his testimony must be made available to respondent's counsel.

¹⁶ N.L.R.B. v. Vapor Blast Co., 237 F.2d 402 (7th Cir. 1961); N.L.R.B. v. Chambers Mfg. Corp., 278 F.2d 715 (5th Cir. 1960).

The examiner found that in 1963 respondent made payments to State Food Stores, a chain of retail grocery stores in West Virginia, in the amount of $10 per week for participation in a radio program sponsored by that customer. He further found that similar payments were not offered to that customer's competitors on any basis, thus establishing a prima facie violation of Section 2(d). However, he found that a competitor of respondent, San Giorgio, had made a bona fide offer to participate on the radio program and that respondent's offer was made in good faith to meet this competitor's offer. Accordingly, he found that respondent's payments were justified under Section 2(b).

The facts, as found by the examiner, establish that respondent's offer to State Food Stores was made in response to verbal information received from respondent's salesman, Mr. High, that San Giorgio had offered to participate on the radio program. This is the same factual situation as that stipulated in Staley, supra. As we have previously stated, the doctrine of Staley applies in a meeting competition defense to a Section 2(d) charge. Thus, the Supreme Court in that case held that there is a burden upon a supplier under these facts, to take steps to verify the existence of the lower offer of a competitor. Respondent concededly made no attempt to verify its salesman's report and, under the circumstances of this case, we think its failure to do so evidences a lack of good faith.

Respondent bases its defense on the testimony of Mr. Viviano and its salesman, Mr. High. Mr. Viviano testified he was contacted by Mr. High with respect to the radio program and was told that "a competitor was going on and we were going out if we didn't go" (tr. 192). He further testified that he was told by Mr. High that the competitor was San Giorgio and that it had offered State Food Stores $10 a week to go on the program. Additionally, he stated that, at this time, San Giorgio was selling to Wheeling Wholesale Grocery, the wholesale supplier of State Food Stores.

Mr. High testified concerning two conversations he had with officials of State Food Stores. The first occurred in a State Food market and was prompted by the fact that he noticed some San Giorgio macaroni on the shelf. Upon asking why, he was advised by Mr. Cassius, general manager of State Food Stores, who was accompanied by the president of the company, that these were samples given to them by San Giorgio, that San Giorgio was offering them "some free goods and a lot of advertising money if we take them in" and that "we don't think we need both San Giorgio and Vimco." Mr. High further testified that about a month or two later, he was approached on the street by Mr. Cassius who explained to him that several suppliers were going together on a radio program with them, that they "were giving a very low cost per spot announcement," and that "he wanted me to contact my office or the company and see if we couldn't participate." This was the entire extent of that conversation. It was allegedly on the basis of these two conversations that he told Mr. Viviano that San Giorgio had offered to participate on the program, that it had offered $10 per week, and that if respondent did not participate, it would lose the business. There can be no doubt from this record that, contrary to respondent's argument, no such information was conveyed to Mr. High by a State Food Stores' representative. At best, his report to respondent was merely a guess, resulting from his first conversation with Mr. Cassius. And that conversation was not initiated by the customer but by the salesman.

The facts establish that, contrary to respondent's assertion, the wholesale supplier of State Food Stores did not carry the competitor's product at the time the payments were initiated (tr. 1442, 834). Moreover, respondent's products were this customer's main macaroni line (tr. 1440) and the recipient of the discriminatory payments was one of the biggest customers of the salesman upon whose report respondent relied (tr. 1439). Despite these facts, respondent would have us believe that it would have lost this account if it had not acted on this salesman's report and made a payment of just $10 a week as a promotional allowance for this customer's radio program.

The Staley decision imposes upon a supplier claiming the "good faith" defense, the burden of showing that it used due diligence in verifying the competitive necessity for a discriminatory price. Above anything else, the facts of this case clearly establish that respondent should have used some degree of care in determining the validity of its salesman's report. This it failed to do. We must conclude, therefore, that respondent has not shown justification for its discriminatory payments to State Food Stores, and its defense that it acted in good faith to meet a competitor's offer must be rejected.

One further comment is required. Respondent also relies on the testimony of its representatives, Mr. Viviano and Mr. High, concerning alleged competitive inroads made on respondent's customers for several years in this market by competitors, including San Giorgio. Respondent offered no documentary or other evidence in support of its statements. However, assuming the validity of this general testimony, it does not establish that any competitor made an offer of a promotional allowance to State Food Stores which necessitated respondent's payments.

We hold that the hearing examiner erred in sustaining respondent's Section 2(b) defense and, accordingly, we grant complaint counsel's appeal on this charge.

Complaint counsel have also appealed from the examiner's ruling that certain payments made by respondent to a retail grocery chain, By-Rite Markets, Inc., did not violate Section 2(d).

An exhibit introduced by complaint counsel (CX 500) discloses that, for the period April 1, 1963, to July 1, 1963, respondent paid By-Rite Markets a total of $195 for radio advertising. In substance, complaint counsel contend that the testimony of Mr. Viviano establishes that these payments were not made available to respondent's customers competing with By-Rite Markets.

We have reviewed the testimony of Mr. Viviano on this point and we agree with the examiner. Contrary to complaint counsel's contention, it cannot be found from Mr. Viviano's testimony that respondent's payments to By-Rite Markets were other than a part of its regular cooperative merchandising agreement, offered to all customers. Since this is the evidence relied upon by complaint counsel, we find with the examiner that they have failed in their burden of proving that respondent's payments to By-Rite Markets were discriminatory. Accordingly, complaint counsel's appeal on this issue is denied.

One additional issue has been raised by complaint counsel in their appeal under Count II. They contend that the examiner erred in finding that the evidence does not support the charge that the discriminatory prepayment of advertising allowances by respondent violated Section 2(d).

The evidence establishes that respondent granted prepayment of its periodic advertising allowances to six of its largest retail chain and wholesale accounts, including Loblaw. The allowances were given to these customers by the issuance of a credit memorandum at the time the merchandise was invoiced and shipped. Respondent had other customers, competing with the six favored purchasers, who did not receive payment until after they had supplied respondent with proof of performance of the promotional service. This normally involved a delay of about 60 days. The record discloses that the dollar value of the allowances prepaid to three customers in the first eight months of 1963 were: Loblaw—$11,875; Charley Brothers—$2,448; and Thorofare Markets—$4,232.

The examiner states that respondent was "apparently willing" to extend prepayment to any customer who desired prepayment, particularly if the customer claimed that it was a hardship not to obtain the money immediately. The only record support for this statement is the testimony of Mr. Viviano that respondent advised its sales force that such prepayments would be made to any customer who claimed a hardship. However, even this testimony is considerably weakened by the testimony of one of respondent's salesmen that "We don't pay anybody before they have performed the performance, sir." In any event, this record does not support a finding that prepayment was made "available" to all competing customers within the meaning of Section 2(d), if that is what the examiner intended. Obviously, a customer must know of the existence of a promotional offer before it is available to him. Vanity Fair Paper Mills, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission. 311 F. 2d 480 (2d Cir. 1962). Respondent's alleged policy places the burden on a customer to request equal treatment before prepayment would be allowed. Moreover, respondent produced no evidence that any salesman ever carried out its alleged instructions. This failure itself supports an inference that the information was not generally passed on. Vanity Fair Paper Mills, Inc., supra. Finally, the testimony of several of respondent's customers that they were never offered prepayment of promotional allowance by respondent establishes that such prepayment was not made available as required by Section 2(d).

In dismissing this charge, the examiner has held that the prepayments were not discriminations of a sufficiently important nature to bottom a finding of violation of Section 2(d). We disagree. The evidence in this case goes beyond the requirements of Section 2(d) and affirmatively establishes the need for an order prohibiting this discriminatory practice.

A representative of a wholesale grocery company, who stated that respondent was one of its two largest macaroni suppliers, testified as follows concerning advance payment of respondent's promotional allowance to his company:

Q. Had it been offered payment at the time of ordering rather than at the time of proof of performance, would that have been of significance to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why?

A. Because it prevents us spending our money. [Tr. 1213.]

The significance of this testimony is emphasized by the previously discussed testimony of another wholesale customer of respondent concerning cash discounts. This customer first testified that if it were not for cash discounts, his company would not make a profit. In testifying concerning the advantage of a 2 percent cash discount in twenty days rather than ten days, this customer stated that the additional ten days would be significant for the reason that the goods would probably have been sold within that time and that the company would have been operating on respondent's money. He further testified that his company regularly borrows short term money for from 30 to 60 days to meet discount terms.

The testimony of respondent's representative, Mr. Viviano, discloses the importance of prepayment of the promotional allowance. In answer to the question whether some customers received their payment immediately, he stated that:

There were some customers who said "Why tie up our money for 60 days?" They said, "You are tying up a considerable amount of cash, so send us a credit memorandum with your invoice. . . ."

As we have found under Count I, profit margins are very low in the grocery business, and available cash is extremely important (tr. 314, 347, 1094, 1118, 1208). One of respondent's customers has stated that his grocery operation is "a penny business," while another testified that "to stay in the competitive race" you have to take full advantage of all cash discounts, special promotions and advertising allowances offered by suppliers.

Viewed in the context of the competitive situation prevailing in the grocery business, we find that the examiner erred in concluding that respondent's discriminatory prepayment of promotional allowances is not of a sufficiently important nature to warrant a finding of a violation of Section 2(d).

We hold that respondent has violated Section 2(d) by prepaying advertising allowances to certain customers and not according such prepayments to competing customers on proportionally equal terms. Therefore, complaint counsel's appeal on this issue is granted.

Count III

The practice placed in issue by complaint counsel under the Section 2(e) count is similar to the SBS broadcasting service discussed under respondent's appeal.

As found by the examiner, respondent made payments to Merchants Broadcasting System (MBS) for providing in-store background music, interspersed with advertisements of respondent's products and those of other participating suppliers, to the retail stores of four supermarket chains and five independent grocers located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The payments began in September 1962 and continued through September 1963. Respondent paid a total of about $18,500 for the MBS service, of which $17,670 was paid for the benefit of the four chains: Loblaw, Kroger, Thorofare and Giant Eagle. Respondent's contract with MBS provided that a rebate of 20 percent of all revenue paid by suppliers, after deduction of certain costs, would go to the four chains. These payments were never made since the cost of the program exceeded the amount of the rebate. During the period of the payments for the MBS services to these customers, respondent had other customers competing with the favored customers who were not accorded similar services.

The examiner found, and it is not disputed, that the broadcasts which originated in Pittsburgh, did not go to any stores outside Pittsburgh, and that respondent, located a short distance from Pittsburgh, made payments to MBS in Pittsburgh. On this basis, he held that there was no interstate commerce involved in the arrangements.¹⁷ We do not agree.

Respondent's sales of macaroni products to two of the favored chain store customers were in interstate commerce. Loblaw's warehouse was in Youngstown, Ohio, and respondent's products were shipped to that warehouse for redistribution to Loblaw's retail stores in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Respondent invoiced its products to Loblaw's Youngstown office and was paid by that office. Also, the record shows that respondent's sales to Kroger were made in Ohio and that the goods were shipped to Kroger's warehouse in Solon, Ohio (CX 1356-1371).

We do not think the fact that the payment for a promotional service was made to a third party within the state or that the service itself was rendered intrastate is determinative of the question whether the service was furnished in the course of interstate commerce. Here, the basic sales to two customers were in commerce. The services paid for by respondent were furnished in connection with such interstate sales. In our opinion, this satisfies the commerce requirements of Section 2(e).¹⁸

Additionally, the benefits resulting from these promotional payments by respondent, an interstate business, accrued to the treasuries of three interstate companies. Such payments thus profited these companies not only in their local Pittsburgh stores but in their entire interstate operations. The court in the Shreveport case, supra, has stated that:

¹⁸ Rowe comments that: "Fundamentally, a promotional payment becomes amenable to Sections 2(d) and 2(e) by virtue of its 'connection' with a sales transaction which is governed by the Robinson-Patman Act. Accordingly, the jurisdictional status of a promotional arrangement is derivative from the sale to which it is appended, apart from any special requirements of Sections 2(d) and 2(e)." Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act, at 393.

The purpose of the Act was to protect small merchants from discriminatory practices at the hands of manufacturers or suppliers favoring large purchasers. The discrimination here was in the course of interstate commerce. It ran from one engaged in interstate commerce to others engaged in interstate commerce. It favored interstate chain operators in their whole business including their intrastate competition with grocerymen in Louisiana in the sale of Petitioner's products who were not offered allowances on proportionally equal terms.

For the foregoing reasons, we hold that the examiner erred in ruling that there was no interstate commerce involved in the discriminatory services furnished by respondent through MBS.

As a second grounds for dismissing this charge, the examiner found that the MBS service as a practical matter was available to all grocery retailers and wholesalers in the Pittsburgh area. This finding is based principally on the testimony of the MBS representative that the company attempted to notify all retail stores by placing ads in two newspapers of the availability of the service, and by mailings to all grocery stores listed in the Yellow Pages of the Pittsburgh telephone directory. Also, he testified that personal contacts were made with retail grocers in an attempt to sell the services to retailers in the Pittsburgh area.

The contract between respondent and MBS provides that:

The company (MBS) hereby represents that participation on this program has been offered on proportionately equal terms to all retail grocery, drug, and similar outlets in the area covered by this agreement.

The testimony of the MBS representative, relied upon by the examiner, relates to the methods used by MBS to comply with this provision in the contract.

Under Section 2(e), a supplier has the legal responsibility of according promotional services to all competing purchasers on proportionally equal terms. In our opinion, this record establishes that respondent did not meet that responsibility. In the first place, it is conceded that respondent itself made no attempt to inform its customers of the service provided through MBS. The testimony of its representative establishes that respondent was aware that the four chains and five independent grocers were the only customers receiving the service. Respondent did not furnish MBS with the names of its customers nor did it attempt to learn the methods MBS might employ to comply with the provision in its contract. Respondent made no inquiry among its customers as to whether they had been offered the MBS service.

Moreover, despite a provision in its contract with MBS that MBS would make available the names of the outlets to whom the service had been offered, respondent made no attempt to determine whether these names included its competing customers in the Pittsburgh area.

Representatives of respondent's customers who competed with the favored customers testified that they had never been informed of the availability of the MBS service.¹⁹

We do not hold that respondent can delegate its responsibility under Section 2(e), as contended by respondent. However, even assuming that such delegation is permissible, we conclude that under the facts of this case, respondent's reliance on the representation in its contract with MBS falls far short of the duty imposed upon it of according equal treatment to all competing customers.

Respondent's attempt to delegate its duty under Section 2(e) must be rejected for yet another reason. The contract provision represents only that the MBS program was offered to all retailers in the area. In our opinion, this type of in-store broadcast is not actually "accorded" to customers within the meaning of Section 2(e) until they are fully advised as to the identity of the participating suppliers. We have no doubt that a customer would be greatly influenced in his decision whether or not to accept the service by the type of products to be advertised and the business reputation of the suppliers. Such notification is not provided for in the MBS contract and the evidence discloses that customers were not so informed. Certainly, a service is not accorded to a customer when substantive information is not made known.

Aside from the failure to name participating suppliers, we find that the three methods of notification allegedly used by MBS, and relied upon by the examiner, were defective.

A copy of the later of the two MBS newspaper ads, which was published a year before respondent's participation in the program, is in the record (CX 573). It sets forth certain charges which must be paid by a retailer for installation of a sound system in his store. However, the evidence discloses that the chains which participated in the program never actually paid these charges. This difference between the advertised offer and the service actually provided would be of vital importance to a prospective customer.

Respondent did not produce a copy of the direct mailing allegedly made to all retailers in the Pittsburgh area. However, the MBS representative testified that this mailing, which was undertaken only one time, was similar to the newspaper ad, using the same guidelines. Thus, retailers who may have received the mailing were not properly informed as to the terms of the offer.

Finally, the testimony as to personal solicitation is general and vague, leaving open the important question of the method used by MBS to select retailers to be directly solicited. No reliance can be placed on this testimony since it is clear that all retailers in the Pittsburgh area were not personally contacted by MBS, and MBS did not know who respondent's customers were in that area.

On the facts in this record, we find that respondent did not accord the MBS service to all of its customers in the Pittsburgh area on proportionally equal terms as required by Section 2(e). Accordingly, complaint counsel's appeal on this issue is granted.

SCOPE OF THE ORDER

As a final issue, complaint counsel contend that the hearing examiner's order should be amended. Specifically, they would include a definition of net price in the prohibition against further price discriminations, and would add two provisions to the order.

We agree with complaint counsel that a definition of net price is required in the prohibition against future price discriminations. The illegal discriminations upon which this prohibition is based were granted by respondent by means of free goods, freight allowances and extended credit terms. Thus, the discriminations were not the result of an established discount schedule but were granted as the result of direct negotiations between respondent and a large chain store purchaser which was attempting to obtain the lowest possible net price in a form acceptable to this supplier. That respondent was willing to accede to discriminations in the forms granted compels the conclusion that, to be effective, an order against future price discriminations must extend to other means by which a reduction in price may be accomplished. We will include a definition of net price in our order for that purpose.

The first provision that complaint counsel would add to the order would require respondent to notify all competing customers concerning the terms, details, and availability of any special prices, cash discount terms, or advertising allowance programs extended to any customer.

We recognize, of course, that the addition of such a provision to an order must be warranted by the facts of the particular case. In this proceeding, respondent has been found to have engaged in practices which violate Sections 2(a), 2(d) and 2(e) of the Clayton Act. For the most part, these violations resulted from specially negotiated deals between respondent and the favored customer. The discriminations were in several different forms and, being directly negotiated, would likely be known only to the customer who reaped the benefits. Moreover, these discriminations occurred in the grocery industry where competition is keen and profit margins are extremely low. We think that a vital factor contributing to respondent's willingness to grant these discriminations in their various forms is its confidence that nonfavored customers would be unaware of the benefits conferred on their competitors. Accordingly, it is our opinion that to preserve competition in this industry, respondent should be required to publicize to all customers any future changes in price, cash discount terms or promotional allowances offered to any customer.²⁰ Such a provision will be included in our order.

The second provision that complaint counsel would add to the order would require respondent to notify the Commission of the terms of any future price schedule which establishes a different price for any individual customer, and submit data in support of the cost justification of such price differences. However, respondent did not make any attempt to defend its price discriminations in this case on the grounds that they were cost justified and, accordingly, we do not believe that the second provision requested by complaint counsel is warranted.

The hearing examiner's order will be modified in accordance with the foregoing discussion.

ADDITIONAL ISSUES

During the course of the oral argument in this case, Commissioner Jones asked respondent's counsel for his transcript references to certain testimony. Also, there was a discussion between Commissioner Elman and complaint counsel concerning a letter signed by respondent's witness, John Dickson, and a memorandum prepared by respondent's counsel of his interview with Mr. Dickson. Subsequently, respondent's counsel directed letters to Commissioner Jones and Commissioner Elman concerning the respective discussions, and forwarded copies of both letters to each of the other Commissioners and to complaint counsel. Attached to Commissioner Jones' letter were excerpts from the official transcript. Respondent's counsel enclosed with his letter to Commissioner Elman a copy of his interview report.

²⁰ The court, in upholding such a requirement in a Section 2(a) Commission order, has stated that " * * * publicity in the future is tailored to prevent recurrence of past conduct which abetted illegal discrimination." William H. Rorer, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 374 F. 2d 622 (2d Cir. 1967).

Complaint counsel have filed formal answers to both of respondent's letter submissions. They contend that the transcript excerpt forwarded to Commissioner Jones are not complete and that the copy of the letter signed by Mr. Dickson should have accompanied the copy of the interview report sent to Commissioner Elman. However, complaint counsel went beyond objecting to respondent's submissions and argued the merits of the matters to which they relate. Respondent then filed motions requesting that complaint counsel's objections be stricken from the record or that respondent be permitted to file answers thereto.

Considering the circumstances leading to respondent's submissions, we find that complaint counsel was not justified in attempting to re-argue the merits of matters which had been fully briefed by both parties. Accordingly, respondent's letters and the attachments will be received in the record but complaint counsel's answers and respondent's subsequent motions relating thereto will be excluded.

One final matter remains. In August, 1967, the staff reported to the Commission on a request for an advisory opinion. In its report, the staff made a number of references to this case. By letter of September 12, 1967, the Secretary advised respondent's counsel that because of the possibility that the references to this matter might be considered ex parte communications, the Commission had directed that the portions of the staff report which contain such references be made available to respondent's counsel for purposes of this proceeding, and also made a part of the record herein on an in camera basis. A copy of the relevant portions of the staff's report was forwarded to respondent's counsel.

Respondent's counsel then forwarded a letter to the Secretary requesting that each member of the Commission who had read the report disqualify himself from further participation in this proceeding. Two Commissioners responded by letters to respondent's counsel, declining to disqualify themselves. Respondent's counsel then requested that its letter to the Secretary be treated as a motion to be acted upon by the Commission.

As grounds for the requested disqualification, respondent's counsel argues that the staff's report contains matters generally to the prejudice of respondent and constitutes an ex parte communication. We find no merit in this argument. Respondent has been provided with a copy of the relevant portions of the staff's report and it is now part of the record. Respondent is thus fully advised as to the staff's comments and has been given an opportunity to discuss the report and to make known its position and present any argument that it desires concerning the matters referred to by the staff. Accordingly, we hold that respondent has not been prejudiced by the staff's report nor has it been denied due process. Its motion requesting disqualification is, therefore, denied.

For the reasons set forth herein, respondent's appeal is denied and the appeal of counsel supporting the complaint is granted in part and denied in part. The initial decision will be modified to conform to the views expressed in this opinion.

Commissioner Elman dissented.

Commissioner Nicholson did not participate for the reason oral argument was heard prior to his appointment to the Commission.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been heard by the Commission upon cross-appeals from the hearing examiner's initial decision; and

The Commission having determined, for the reasons stated in the accompanying decision, that respondent's appeal should be denied and that the appeal of counsel supporting the complaint should be granted in part and denied in part; and

The Commission having further determined that the initial decision should be modified to conform to the views expressed in the accompanying opinion:

It is ordered, That the initial decision be modified by adding the following paragraph to finding number 15 on page 325:

Respondent's normal cash discount terms were 2%—10 days. By granting Loblaw cash discount terms of 2%—20 days, respondent discriminated in price between Loblaw and respondent's other customers competing with Loblaw in the sale and distribution of respondent's products. This discrimination enabled Loblaw to sell respondent's products before it had to pay for them, thus giving Loblaw more cash to use for other purposes. Available cash is extremely important in the retail grocery industry. In light of the intensively competitive nature of this industry, the effect of respondent's discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition between Loblaw and its competitors who were not granted cash discount terms of 2%—20 days by respondent.

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by striking the third and fourth sentences in finding number 17 on page 326.

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by striking the last paragraph in finding number 20, beginning on page 327 and ending on page 328, and substituting the following:

Respondent contends that its payments to State Food Stores were made in good faith to meet the offer of a competitor, San Giorgio Macaroni Company. Mr. Viviano testified that he was told by his salesman, Mr. High, that respondent would lose the State Food business if it did not participate on the radio program, that the competitor which had made an offer was San Giorgio, and that this competitor had offered $10 a week to participate. He further testified that at that time, San Giorgio was selling its products to the wholesale supplier of State Food.

Mr. High testified that he was told by a State Food official that San Giorgio had offered some free goods and a lot of advertising money. At a subsequent meeting with this official, he was requested to contact his office to see if respondent would participate on the radio program. He did not testify that he was given the information which he allegedly related to Mr. Viviano.

It is further established that respondent's products were State Food's main macaroni line, that State Food was one of the biggest customers of Mr. High on whose report respondent allegedly relied, and that the wholesale supplier of State Food did not carry the San Giorgio macaroni products.

Respondent made absolutely no attempt to verify the report allegedly made by its salesman. On the facts of record, respondent has not shown justification for its discriminatory payments to State Food Stores, and its meeting competition defense must be rejected.

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by adding the following to finding number 22 on page 329:

Respondent's contention that it knew the amount of competitors' offers is not supported on the record. The testimony of the Fox representative, on which respondent relies, establishes at best that the cost of a spot announcement was the same to all participants. However, it is likewise established that participating suppliers took different numbers of spot announcements and that they all could not afford to take the same number of announcements since Fox did not sell a sufficient amount of their products.

The testimony of the Fox representative concerning his discussions with respondent is vague and general. Mr. Viviano testified only that he was told that if he did not go on the program, another company was going on. Additionally, respondent well knew that its payments to Fox for participation on the radio and TV programs were in addition to its regular cooperative promotional payments to Fox. Under the circumstances, the facts relied upon by respondent are not sufficient to warrant a finding that its discriminatory payments to Fox were made in good faith to meet the payments offered by a competitor.

Additionally, although the payments to Fox extended for a three-year period, the agreement was renewed annually. Complaint counsel established that after respondent began participating on the program, no other macaroni supplier attempted to participate or was solicited to participate by Fox. Respondent's failure to show the existence of facts which would reasonably lead it to believe that a continuation of the discriminatory payments was necessary evidences a lack of good faith as required by Section 2(b).

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by striking the last sentence in the first paragraph of finding number 25 and by striking the second paragraph of that finding on page 330, and substituting the following:

Respondent contends that its sales force was advised that prepayments of promotional allowances would be made to any customer who claimed a hardship. This self-serving testimony can be given little weight in view of the contradictory testimony of respondent's salesman. Moreover, this policy, if established, does not meet the requirement of Section 2(d) that promotional payments be made "available" to competing customers since customers would have no knowledge of the existence of the offer unless they informed respondent that it was a hardship for them to wait for payment until after proof of performance.

There is normally a delay of about 60 days before a customer receives payment for a service which he has performed. The testimony of respondent's nonfavored customers, and of respondent's representative, establishes that prepayment of promotional allowances is significant to the customer for the reason that it prevents him from having to spend his money and tie up his cash. As previously found, the availability of cash is extremely important for profitable operation in the retail grocery industry.

We find that respondent by prepaying advertising allowances to certain customers and not according such prepayments on proportionally equal terms to other competing customers, has violated Section 2(d).

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by striking therefrom the last five sentences of finding number 28, beginning on page 331 and ending on page 332, and substituting the following:

Respondent sold its macaroni products to two of the favored customers, Loblaw and Kroger, in interstate commerce. The products were shipped from respondent's plant in Pennsylvania to these customers in Ohio from where payment was made. The MBS services paid for by respondent were furnished in connection with these interstate sales. Additionally, the benefits resulting from these payments accrued to the treasuries of three interstate businesses, Loblaw, Kroger and Thorofare. Accordingly, the MBS services accorded these customers were furnished in the course of interstate commerce.

Respondent contends that the MBS service was accorded to all its customers in the Pittsburgh area and relies on the representation in its contract with MBS that MBS had offered participation on the program to all retail grocery, drug and similar outlets in the area. In further support of this contention, the MBS representative testified that his company attempted to notify all retail stores of the availability of the service by placing ads in local newspapers, by mailings to all such stores listed in the Pittsburgh telephone directory, and by personal contacts.

Representatives of respondent's nonfavored Pittsburgh customers testified that they had never been informed of the MBS service. Respondent was aware that only a few of its customers were receiving the service. Respondent did not attempt to inform its customers of the service, did not advise MBS as to the names of its customers in the area, and made no effort to determine the methods employed by MBS to comply with its contract. Moreover, the methods allegedly used by MBS failed to disclose essential information to retail stores, i.e., the identity of participating suppliers, and these methods were employed by MBS prior to respondent's participation on the program.

Additionally the newspaper ads and mailings used by MBS differed substantially from the service actually rendered in that they represented that there were charges to the retailer for installation of a sound system in his store whereas the chain stores which actually participated did not pay these charges. No reliance can be placed on the testimony concerning personal solicitation since all retailers in the area were not personally contacted and MBS did not know the identity of respondent's customers.

On the basis of the foregoing facts, it is found that respondent did not accord the MBS service to all of its customers in the Pittsburgh area on proportionally equal terms.

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by striking the next to last sentence in finding number 33 on page 334.

Final Order

73 F.T.C.

It is further ordered, That the initial decision be modified by striking conclusions number 6, 10, and 12 on page 335 and substituting the following:

6. The promotional payments to State Food Stores violate section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended, and respondent has failed to establish that these payments were made in good faith to meet the payments for services or facilities offered by a competitor.

10. The record supports a conclusion that respondent's prepayment of advertising allowances to Loblaw and five other of its customers constitutes violations of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

12. The services performed by Merchants Broadcasting System for certain of respondent's customers, paid for by respondent, were furnished in the course of interstate commerce. These services violate Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, as amended, since they were not accorded to all of respondent's competing customers on proportionally equal terms.

It is further ordered, That the following order to cease and desist be substituted for the order in the initial decision:

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Viviano Macaroni Company, a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly, indirectly, or through any corporate or other device, in or in connection with the sale of its macaroni products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the amended Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

I

Discriminating directly, or indirectly, in the price of such products of like grade and quality by selling to any purchaser at net prices higher than the net price charged any other purchaser who competes in the resale and distribution of respondent's products with the purchaser, or with customers of the purchaser, paying the higher price. "Net price" as used in this order shall mean the ultimate cost to the purchaser, and, for purposes of determining such cost, there shall be taken into account all rebates, allowances, commissions, discounts, credit arrangements, terms and conditions of sale, and other forms of direct and indirect price reductions, by which such ultimate cost to the purchaser is affected.

II

Paying or contracting for the payment of anything of value to, or for the benefit of, any customer of respondent as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of respondent's products, unless such payment or consideration is made available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products.

III

Furnishing, contracting to furnish, or contributing to the furnishing of services or facilities in connection with the handling, processing, sale or offering for sale of respondent's products to any purchaser of such products bought for resale, when such services or facilities are not accorded on proportionally equal terms to all other purchasers who resell such products in competition with any purchaser who receives such services or facilities.

It is further ordered, That, in addition to and apart from the provisions of the preceding paragraphs, if respondent at any time after the effective date of this order :

1. Grants or permits any customer to take delivery of, or make payments for, its merchandise on a basis other than regularly published prices, freight prepaid, or

2. Grants or permits any customer to submit proof of performance, or receive payment, for any advertising or other promotional allowance on a basis, or on terms, other than those set forth in respondent's announcements to customers of said promotion, or customarily observed by respondent in such promotions, in any locality, or

3. Grants or permits any customer to make payments for cash discount purposes on terms and conditions other than those contained in respondent's published price lists, or customarily observed by respondent, in any locality, respondent shall promptly notify all other customers who compete, or whose customers compete, with the customer so granted or permitted, setting forth in writing the details and provisions thereof, and respondent shall allow, and the written notification shall contain a statement that such customers may, at their option, elect such provisions, terms or conditions on an equal basis. In no event, however, shall respondent pay to any customer an allowance for freight, or an allowance for any differing methods of sale or delivery, which exceeds any cost savings to respondent resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which respondent's products are sold or delivered to such customer.

Complaint

It is further ordered, That the hearing examiner's initial decision, as modified in this order and as supplemented by the findings and conclusions embodied in the accompanying opinion, be, and it hereby is, adopted as the decision of the Commission.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the provisions in the order set forth herein.

Commissioner Elman dissenting, and Commissioner Nicholson not participating for the reason oral argument was heard prior to his appointment to the Commission.
